Gray

Published April 8th, 1799, by J. Scatcherd Ave Maria Lane.
THE POETICAL WORKS
OF
THOMAS GRAY, LL.B.
Late Professor of Modern Languages and History in the University of Cambridge:
WITH SOME ACCOUNT OF HIS LIFE AND WRITINGS.
THE WHOLE
CAREFULLY REVISED; AND ILLUSTRATED BY NOTES,
ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.
TO WHICH ARE ANNEXED,
POEMS
WRITTEN BY, ADDRESSED TO, OR IN MEMORY OF,
MR. GRAY;
SEVERAL OF WHICH WERE NEVER BEFORE COLLECTED.

Hark, his hands the lyre explore!
Bright-ey'd Fancy, bow'r'ing o'er,
Scatters from her picture'd urn
Thoughts that breathe and words that burn.
Gray, of Dryden, in the Progress of Poesy.

LONDON:
PRINTED FOR J. SCATCHERD, NO. 12, AVE-MARIA LANS.
1799.
Entered at Stationers Hall.
CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>ODE on the Spring</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>On the Death of a Favourite Cat</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>On a distant Prospect of Eton College</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>To Adversity</td>
<td>16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Progress of Poesy</td>
<td>19</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Bard</td>
<td>31</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ode for Music</td>
<td>48</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Fatal Sisters</td>
<td>55</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Descent of Odin</td>
<td>60</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Triumphs of Owen</td>
<td>71</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Death of Hoel</td>
<td>75</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sonnet on the Death of Mr. Richard West</td>
<td>77</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Epitaph on Mrs. Clarke</td>
<td>78</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Epitaph on Sir William Williams</td>
<td>80</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elegy written in a Country Church-Yard</td>
<td>82</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
SUPPLEMENT:
COMPRISING THE POSTHUMOUS POEMS AND FRAGMENTS OF MR. GRAY.

Ode on the Pleasure arising from Vicissitude 97
Translation of a Passage from Statius 103
Fragment of a Latin Poem 105
Ode written in the Album of the Grande Chartreuse, in Dauphiny, August 1741 112
The First Scene of a Tragedy 116
Hymn to Ignorance 131
The Alliance of Education and Government 134
A Long Story 140
Stanzas to Mr. Bentley 150
Sketch of his own Character 152

POEMS
ATTRIBUTED TO MR. GRAY.

Lyric Stanzas 153
Epigram 155
Stanzas suggested by a View, in 1766 156
Jemmy Twitcher; or, the Cambridge Courtship 158
CONTENTS.

POEMS:

ADDRESS TO, AND IN MEMORY OF, MR. GRAY.

To Mr. Gray, upon his Odes .................. 163
Ode to Mr. Gray, on the Backwardness of Spring ........................................... 165
Ode on the Death of Mr. Gray ................. 167
Fragment of an Ode on the Death of Mr. Gray 171
Stanzas on the Death of Mr. Gray .............. 176
The Tears of Genius ............................ 178
Epitaph on Mr. Gray's Monument in Westminster Abbey ................................. 186
THE Poems of Mr. Gray are here presented to the Public in a more elegant style of Typography than they ever before assumed; but this, it is true, were a very small advantage, if unaccompanied by others better entitled to consideration.

Of Poetry which has incurred the imputation of being difficult to comprehend, it seemed not an ill-bestowed labour to revise and establish the punctuation. The Edition by Mr. Mason, in Four Volumes, was printed at a provincial Press, and its punctuation is certainly far from accurate; nor can it be discerned, that much attention has been paid to this particular by subsequent Editors. To supply this defect, my best judgment and closest attention have been employed in the present Edition.

It had often occurred to me, however, that many persons of limited education have been deterred by imaginary difficulties from entering with spirit on the perusal of Mr. Gray’s Poems; and that much of this was attributable to the uniform manner in which all his Stanzas have hitherto been printed, however various in metre, without any of those indentions which are so agreeable to the sight, and so properly adapted to the purpose of anticipating in the Reader’s mind the change of measure. Through every edition that I have yet seen, this defect (if I am right in calling it so) has been continued. In the present Volume, however, the irregular lines of the Odes, and other alternate verses, are printed with the indentions to which I have alluded, and which I consider as being at least a relief to the eye, if not an assistance to the ear.

Prefixed or subjoined to the greater part of the Poems, is some explanation of the subject or occasion on which they were respectively written, or some observation illustrative of their character or tendency.

The Ode for Music, performed at the Installation of the Duke of Grafton as Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, is printed (to give the reader an idea of its musical arrangement) with the divisions of Air, Recitative, Chorus, &c. adopted by Dr. Randolph, the Composer.

To The Descent of Odin, and The Triumphs of Owen, I have appended literal Versions of the original Poems, of which Mr. Gray's are imitations*.

In the Elegy written in a Country Church Yard, are inserted, among the Notes, some Stanzas originally designed as a part of the Poem, but omitted by the Author when he published it.

Among the Posthumous Pieces of Mr. Gray, is the Latin Fragment on the Gaurus; to which I have subjoined (for the convenience of the mere English Reader) a Translation, which appeared some years since in a respectable Periodical Publication, and the execution of which does no small credit to the talents of the unknown Writer.

* See pp. 67, and 71.

With the same view to the ease of the unlearned Reader, I have annexed to the Latin Ode, written in the Album of the Grand Chartreuse, two Imitations, in different measures; the latter of which, I think, has been justly ascribed to the pen of William Seward, Esq.

At the end of the Posthumous Pieces and Fragments that have been usually published as Mr. Gray's, I have adopted Four Poems, which I found scattered in fugitive publications, and attributed with much probability to the same Author*.

* See pp. 153 to 160
After these I have inserted Six Poems Addressed To, or Written in Memory of Mr. Gray; four of which were never before collected.

With respect to the Notes, which I hope will be found neither superabundant nor unsatisfactorily concise, they include all Mr. Gray's own illustrations, together with remarks selected from Mr. Mason, Mr. Scott, Dr. Johnson, and several anonymous commentators; and if these be found to have been culled with the necessary degree of judgment and discrimination, I have only to hope, that the occasional remarks of the Editor will not be found useless nor impertinent.

It has been usual, I know, to print the annotations, en masse, at the end of the Poems; and where they are so extremely numerous and extensive as to unfit them for accompanying the text which refers to them, that method certainly becomes necessary. It has here, however, been found possible to insert the notes at the feet of the pages to which they respectively belong, without encumbering the text in any unsightly manner. If a reader has either not time or not inclination to refer to these notes as he proceeds, he can as easily pass them over as if they were not there; but if he reads with deliberation, and does not think it time misspent to assist his understanding by a reference to local or critical explications, these are certainly referred to with more pleasure, because with less trouble, than by turning on every trivial occasion to the end of the book.
To conclude: It may with great truth be said, that the present collection comprises more poems of Mr. Gray, and miscellanies concerning him, than any Edition before published; and if the manner in which the whole is arranged and digested be found deserving of public encouragement, the Editor will be well content to share the merits of the Volume with a correct and elegant Printer.

MAY 1, 1799.

J.
SOME ACCOUNT

OF

THE LIFE AND WRITINGS

OF

MR. THOMAS GRAY.

Of a life so sedentary and retired as that passed by the gentleman whose works are here presented to the Reader, the incidents can scarcely be expected to comprise any thing uncommon or remarkable: yet a Reader who is pleased with the productions of the Poet, very naturally desires to know something of the Man.

The parents of our Author were respectable citizens of London. His grandfather had been a merchant of some eminence; his father, Mr.
Philip Gray, exercised the trade of a money-scrivener; but, being of a shy and indolent temper, rather diminished than increased his paternal fortune. He had many children, of whom Thomas, the subject of this narrative, was the fifth born. All, except himself, died in their infancy; and it has been said, that he narrowly escaped suffocation (owing to too great a fullness of blood, which destroyed the rest), and would certainly have been cut off as early, had not his mother, with a courage remarkable for one of her sex, and especially for so very tender a parent, ventured to open a vein with her own hand, which instantly removed the paroxysm.

According to Mr. Mason, our Poet was born in Cornhill, December 26, 1716, and educated at Eton school, under the care of Mr. Antrobus, his maternal uncle, who was at that time assistant to Dr. George, and also a fellow of St. Peter's Col-

* Dr. Johnson, I know not on what authority, gives as the date of Mr. Gray's birth, November 26, 1716.
lege, Cambridge, to which place Mr. Gray removed, and was there admitted a pensioner in the year 1734.

While at school he had contracted an intimacy with Mr. Horace Walpole*, and Mr. Richard West †.

The latter of these gentlemen removed from Eton to Christ Church, Oxford, about the same time that Mr. Gray left that place for Cambridge; and from this time an epistolary correspondence was carried on between them.

Mr. Gray's first attempt in English verse, as Mr. Mason tells us, was a *Translation from Statius†, in May 1736, which is much in the spirited manner of Dryden.

* The late Earl of Orford.
† Son of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland. His maternal grandfather was the famous Dr. Burnet.
‡ See p. 103.
In April, 1738, Mr. West left Christ Church for the Inner Temple, to study the law; and Mr. Gray removed from Peterhouse to Town in the September following, intending also to adopt that profession in the same society; for which purpose his father had already either hired or bought him a set of chambers. But on an invitation which Mr. Walpole gave him to be his companion in his travels, this intention was laid aside for the present, and never after put in execution.

With Mr. Walpole he set out in March 1739. They wandered through France into Italy; and his letters, which were published by Mr. Mason, contain a pleasing account of many parts of their journey, enlivened with such glowing descriptions and observations as might be naturally expected from such a genius on classic ground, and some highly-finished pieces of Latin poetry composed on the spot.

During his residence in Italy, Pope Clement XII. died, and the amiable Benedict XIV. was elected, of whom, in one of Mr. Gray's letters, we find the following little speech to the Cardinals in the Conclave, while they were undetermined about an election: "Most eminent Lords, here " are three Bolognese, of different characters, but " all equally proper for the Popedom. If it be " your pleasure to pitch upon a saint, there is " Cardinal Gotti; if upon a politician, there is " Aldrovandi; if upon a booby (coglioni) here am " I." But to return:

"Unequal friendships," says Dr. Johnson, are easily dissolved." At Rheggio a disagreement arose between Gray and Mr. Walpole, originating, we are told, in the difference of their tempers (the former curious, pensive, and philosophical; the latter gay, lively, and, of course, inconsiderate); but the chief blame of this quarrel Mr. Walpole, who survived Mr. Gray, generously took to himself; and it gives us satisfaction to say, that a lasting reconciliation took place about three years after the dispute. The contention, however, was at the time so sharp between them, that, like Paul and Barnabas, they departed asunder one from the other; and Mr. Gray continued his journey, in a manner suitable to his small fortune, with only an occasional laquais de voyage, through Padua, Verona, Milan, Turin, and Lyons, going out of his way to make a second visit to the Grande Chartreuse in Dauphiny, where he enriched the Album of the Fathers with an Alcaic Ode* worthy of the Augustan age, and marked with all the finest touches of his melancholy muse. He reached London, September 1, 1741.

On his arrival he found his father's constitution almost worn out by the very severe attacks of the gout, to which he had been for many years subject; and, indeed, the next return of that disorder was fatal to him. He died the 6th of November following, at the age of 65.

* See p. 112.
It has been before observed, that Mr. Philip Gray was of a reserved and indolent temper; he was also morose, unsocial, and obstinate; defects which, if not inherent in his disposition, might probably arise from his bodily complaints. His indolence had led him to neglect the business of his profession; and his obstinacy, to build a country-house at Wanstead, without acquainting either his wife or son with the design (to which he knew they would be very averse) till it was executed. This building, which he undertook late in life, was attended with very considerable expence, which might almost be called so much money thrown away; for, after his death, it was found necessary to sell the house for two thousand pounds less than its original cost. Mr. Gray, therefore, at this time found his patrimony so small, that it would by no means enable him to prosecute the study of the law, without becoming burdensome to his Mother and Aunt. These two sisters had for many years carried on a trade separate from that of Mrs. Gray's husband *; by which having acquired what would support them decently for the rest of their lives, they left off business soon after his death, and retired to Stoke, near Windsor, to the house of their other Sister, Mrs. Rogers, lately become a widow. Both of them wished Mr. Gray to follow the profession for which he had been originally intended, and would undoubtedly have contributed all in their power to enable him to do it with ease and conveniency. He, however, though he had taken his resolution of declining it, was too delicate to hurt two persons for whom he had so tender an affection, by peremptorily declaring his real intentions; he therefore changed, or pretended to change, the line of that study; and, accordingly, the latter end of the subsequent year he went to Cambridge to take his Bachelor's Degree in Civil Law.

* They kept a kind of India warehouse on Cornhill, under the joint names of Gray and Antrobus.
The narrowness of his circumstances, however, was not the only thing that distressed him at this period. He had, as we have seen, lost the friendship of Mr. Walpole abroad. He had also lost much time in his travels; a loss which application could not easily retrieve, when so severe and laborious a study as that of the Common Law was to be the object of it; and he well knew that, whatever improvement he might have made in this interval, either in taste or science, such improvement would stand him in little stead with regard to his present situation and exigencies. Yet this was not all: His other friend, Mr. West, he found, on his return, oppressed by sickness and a load of family misfortunes. These the sympathizing heart of Mr. Gray made his own. He did all in his power (for he was now with him in London) to soothe the sorrows of his friend, and to try to alleviate them by every office of the purest and most perfect affection: But his cares were vain. The distresses of Mr. West's mind had already too far affected a body, from the first, weak and delicate. His health declined daily; he, therefore, left town in March 1742, and, for the benefit of the air, went to David Mitchell's, Esq. at Popes, near Hatfield, Hertfordshire; at whose house he died the 1st of June following.

In this year Mr. Gray seems to have applied himself seriously to Poetry; for he produced his Ode to Spring *, his Prospect of Eton College †, and his Ode to Adversity ‡. He began likewise a Latin Poem De Principiis Cogitandi §, and a tragedy on the subject of Nero and Agrippina ||.

It may be collected from the narrative of Mr. Mason, that Gray's prime ambition was to have excelled in Latin Poetry; and Dr. Johnson expresses a wish that he had prosecuted that design.

* See p. 3. † See p. 10. ‡ See p. 16.
§ This Fragment is printed in Mr. Mason's Memoirs of Gray, Vol. III. p. 55—66.
|| See p. 116.
He now lived only at Peterhouse, where he cultivated his mind, and enlarged his views, without any other purpose than of improving and amusing himself, when Mr. Mason, being elected a Fellow of Pembroke Hall, brought him a companion, who was afterwards to be his Editor.

Of Mr. Mason’s acquaintance with Mr. Gray the former gentleman gives us an account, from which we extract the following passage: “It was not till about the year 1747 that I had the happiness of being introduced to the acquaintance of Mr. Gray. Some very juvenile imitations of Milton’s juvenile poems, which I had written a year or two before (and of which the Monody on Mr. Pope’s death was the principal *), he then, at the request of one of my friends, was

* The other two were in imitation of ‘l’Allegro & il Penseroso,’ and intitled ‘Il Bellicoso & il Pacifico.’ The latter of these I was persuaded to revise and publish in the Cambridge Collection of Verses on the Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, 1748. The former has since got into a Miscellany printed by G. Pearch, from the indiscretion, I suppose, of some acquaintance who had a copy of it.”
"so obliging as to revise. The same year, on account of a dispute which had happened between the master and fellows of Pembroke Hall, I had the honour of being nominated by the Fellows to fill one of the vacant Fellowships*. I was at this time scholar of St. John's College, and Batchelor of Arts, personally unknown to the gentlemen who favoured me so highly; therefore, that they gave me this mark of distinction and preference was greatly owing to Mr. Gray, who was well acquainted with several of that society, and to Dr. Heberden."

From the winter of 1742, to the day of his death, Mr. Gray's principal residence was at Cambridge. He indeed, during the lives of his mother and aunts, spent his summer vacation at Stoke; and, after they died, he made little tours

* Though nominated in 1747, I was not elected Fellow till February, 1749. The Master refused his assent, claiming a negative; the affair was therefore not compromised till after an ineffectual litigation of two years."
on visits to his friends in different parts of the country: But he was seldom absent from college any considerable time, except between the years 1759 and 1762; when, on the opening of the British Museum, he took lodgings in Southampton-Row, in order to have recourse to the Harleian and other Manuscripts there deposited, from which he made several curious extracts *.

It may seem strange, that a person who had conceived an early dislike to Cambridge, and who was now returned to it with this prejudice rather augmented, should, when he was free to choose, make that very place his principal abode for near thirty years: But this Mr. Mason thinks may be easily accounted for from his love of books, (ever his ruling passion) and the straitness of his circumstances, which prevented the gratification of it;

* These, amounting in all to a tolerably-sized folio, passed into Mr. Walpole's hands, who printed the Speech of Sir Thomas Wyatt from them in the second number of his Miscellaneous Antiquities.
for to a man who could not conveniently purchase even a small library, what situation so eligible as that which affords free access to a number of large ones? This reason also accounts for another singular fact. During his residence at Stoke, in the spring and summer of the year 1742, he wrote a considerable part of his more finished poems. Hence one would be naturally led to conclude that, on his return to Cambridge, when the ceremony of taking his degree was over, the quiet of the place would have prompted him to continue the cultivation of his poetical talents, and that immediately, as the Muse seems in this year to have peculiarly inspired him; but this was not the case. Reading, he has often declared, was much more agreeable to him than writing: He, therefore, now laid aside composition almost entirely, and applied himself with intense assiduity to the study of the best Greek authors; insomuch that, in the space of about six years, there were hardly any writers of note in that language which he had not only read but digested; remarking, by the mode of common-place, their contents, their difficult and corrupt passages; and all this with the accuracy of a critic added to the diligence of a student.

In the retirement of Peterhouse, Mr. Gray wrote, in 1747, An Ode on the Death of a Favourite Cat , and the year afterwards attempted a poem of more importance, On Education and Government†, of which the fragments that remain contain some exquisite lines. His next production (1750) was his far-famed Elegy in a Country Church Yard‡, which was first communicated to Mr. Walpole, and passed from him into the hands of several persons of distinction §. After having for some time been privately transmitted from one hand to another, it at length found its way to the public eye in "The Magazine of Magazines." This

* See p. 7. † See p. 134. ‡ See p. 82.
§ This brought him acquainted with Lady Cobham, and furnished an occasion for his Long Story.
disreputable mode of appearance subjected the author to the necessity of exhibiting it under a less disadvantageous form; and Mr. Bentley soon after wishing to supply every ornament that his pencil could contribute, drew not only for it, but also for the rest of Mr. Gray's productions, a set of designs, which were repaid by the Poet with some beautiful Stanzas, of which, however, only a fragment remains *.

In March, 1753, Mr. Gray lost that mother for whom, on all occasions, he showed a most tender regard.

She was buried in the same vault in Stoke Church-yard, where her sister's remains had been deposited more than three years before. As the inscription on the tombstone (at least the latter part of it) is undoubtedly of Mr. Gray's writing, it would here claim a place, even if it had not a peculiar pathos to recommend it, and, at the same time, a true inscriptive simplicity.

*See p. 150.

IN THE VAULT BENEATH ARE DEPOSITED, IN HOPE OF A JOYFUL RESURRECTION,
THE REMAINS OF
MARY ANTROBUS.
SHE DIED, UNMARRIED, NOV. V. MDCCXLIX.
AGED LXVI.

IN THE SAME PIOUS CONFIDENCE,
BESIDE HER FRIEND AND SISTER,
HERE SLEEP THE REMAINS OF DOROTHY GRAY, WIDOW,
THE CAREFUL TENDER MOTHER
OF MANY CHILDREN, ONE OF WHOM ALONE
HAD THE MISFORTUNE TO SURVIVE HER.
SHE DIED MARCH XI. MDCCCLIII, AGED LXVII.

About three years afterward (1756) some young men of the College, whose chambers were near
Mr. Gray's, diverted themselves with disturbing him by frequent and troublesome noises, and, as is said, by pranks yet more offensive and contemptuous. This insolence, having endured it a while, he represented to the governors of the society; but, finding his complaint little attended to, he with becoming spirit removed himself to Pembroke Hall.

In 1757 he published The Progress of Poesy *, and *The Bard†, which have occasioned some sarcastic observations from the pen of Dr. Johnson, who calls them, "two compositions at which the readers of poetry were at first content to gaze in mute amazement. Some that tried them confessed their inability to understand them, though Warburton said that they were understood as well as the works of Milton and Shake- speare, which it is the fashion to admire. Garrick wrote a few lines in their praise ‡. Some

* See p. 19. † See p. 31.
‡ These are inserted in p. 163 of this Volume.
"hardy champions undertook to rescue them from neglect; and in a short time many were content to be shown beauties which they could not see."

From this splenetic effusion I turn with pleasure to the more just remarks of Mr. Gilbert Wakefield, who says of Mr. Gray's Pindaric Odes, that "They have a much greater resemblance to the Odes of the Theban bard than any thing of the kind in our own, and probably in any other language. Wildness of thought and irregularity of verse, had usually been esteemed the only way to resemble Pindar. The characteristic excellencies of Pindar's poetry are, sublimity of conception, boldness of metaphor, dignity of stile, rapidity of composition, and magnificence of phraseology. If a fair judgment can be formed upon those few specimens which the desolations of time have spared, in grandeur of imagery and regularity of thought, he is surpassed by Mr. Gray.—These sublime and ela"borate productions of genius chastised by learning, and of learning invigorated by genius, are from their nature by no means calculated to please the generality of readers, especially upon a slight acquaintance.—That spirit of lyrical inspiration which they breathe; that divine glow of pathos which at the same time melts and inflames the reader, cannot operate with their full effect, but on a congenial soul, attuned to the bold vibrations of enthusiastic poesy.—He who can continue amidst the blaze of splendour that bursts around him, amidst the torrent of sublimity that pours along, sedately speculating upon petty blemishes, is certainly a stranger to those sensations which animated Pindar and Mr. Gray."

A vacancy in the office of Poet Laureate was in 1757 occasioned by the death of Colley Cibber. The Duke of Devonshire, being at that time Chamberlain, made a polite offer of it to Mr. Gray, through the medium of Lord John Cavendish, his brother; but, whether on account of the disgrace that had been brought upon that office by the profligacy and inability of some who had filled it, or for what other reason we cannot now discover, Mr. Gray declined it, and it was conferred on Mr. Whitehead.

Our poet's life was now chiefly devoted to literary pursuits, and the cultivation of friendship. It is obvious from the testimony of his letters, that he was indefatigable in the former, and that he was always ready to perform kind offices in the latter. Sir William Williams, an accomplished and gallant young officer, having been killed at Belleisle, his friend Mr. Frederic Montagu proposed to erect a monument over him, and with this view requested Mr. Gray to furnish the epitaph. His slight acquaintance with Sir William would have been a sufficient reason for declining the task; but the Friendliness of Mr. Montagu's disposition, and the sincerity of affliction with which he was affected, wrought so powerfully upon Mr. Gray, that he could not refuse him, though he was by no means able to satisfy himself with the verses he wrote.

The professorship of modern languages and history, in the University of Cambridge, becoming vacant in 1762, through the death of Mr. Turner, Mr. Gray was spirited up by some of his friends to ask of Lord Bute the succession. His application however failed, the office having been promised to Lady Lowther for the tutor of Sir James.

In 1765, Mr. Gray, ever attached to the beauties of nature as well as to the love of antiquities, undertook a journey to Scotland for the purpose of gratifying his curiosity and taste. During his stay in that country Dr. Beattie found the means of engaging his notice and friendship. Through the intervention of this gentleman the Marischal College of Aberdeen had requested to know if the degree of Doctor of Laws would be acceptable to

* See p. 80.
Gray; but this mark of their attention he civilly declined.

In December 1767, Dr. Beattie, still desirous that his country should afford some testimony of its regard to the merit of our poet, solicited his permission to print at the University press of Glasgow an elegant edition of his works; Dodsley had before asked the like favour, and Mr. Gray, unwilling to refuse, gratified both with a copy containing a few notes and the imitations of the old Norwegian poetry, intended to supplant the Long Story, which was printed at first only to illustrate Mr. Bentley’s designs.

The death of Mr. Brocket, in the July following, left another opening to the professorship which he had before unsuccessfully sought. Lord Bute however was not in office, and the Duke of Grafton, to preclude a request, within two days of the vacancy appointed Mr. Gray.
Cambridge before had been his residence from choice; it now became so from obligation, and the greater part of his time there was filled up by his old engagements or diverted to new ones. It has been suggested, that he once embraced the project of republishing Strabo; and there are reasons to believe that he meant it, as the many geographical disquisitions he left behind him appear to have been too minute for the gratification of general inquiry. The like observation may be transferred to Plato and the Greek Anthologia, as he had taken uncommon pains with both, and left a MS of the latter fit for the press. His design of favouring the public with the history of English poetry may be spoken of with more certainty, as in this he had not only engaged with Mr. Mason as a colleague, but actually paraphrased the Norse and Welch poems inserted in his Works for specimens of the wild spirit which animated the bards of ancient days. The extensive compass, however, of the subject, and the knowledge that it was also in the hands of Mr. Warton, induced him to relinquish what he had thus successfully begun.

Nor did his love for the antiquities of his country confine his researches to its poetry alone: the structures of our ancestors and their various improvements, particularly engaged his attention. Hitherto there has nothing so authentic and accurate on the subject of Gothic architecture appeared, as the observations upon it drawn up by Mr. Gray, and inserted by Mr. Bentham in his History of Ely. Of heraldry, its correlative science, he possessed the entire knowledge. But of the various pursuits which employed his studies for the last ten years of his life, none were so acceptable as those which explained the economy of Nature. For botany he acquired a taste of his uncle when young: and the exercise which, for the sake of improvement in this branch of the science, he induced himself to take, contributed not a little to the preservation of his health. How considerable his improvements in it were, those only can tell who have seen his additions to Hudson, and his notes on Linnaeus. While confined to zoology, he successfully applied his discoveries to illustrate Aristotle and others of the Ancients.

From engagements of this kind Mr. Gray's attention was neither often nor long diverted. Excepting the time he gave up to experiments on flowers, for the purpose of investigating the process of vegetation, (which can scarcely be called a relaxation from his stated employment) his only amusement was music; nor was his acquaintance with this art less than with others of much more importance. His skill was acquired from the productions of the best composers, out of whose works when in Italy he had made a selection. Vocal music he chiefly preferred. The harpsichord was his favourite instrument; but though far from remarkable for a finished execution, yet he accommodated his voice so judiciously to his playing as to give an auditor considerable pleasure. His judgment in statuary and painting was exquisite, and formed from an almost instinctive perception of those graces beyond the reach of art in which the divine works of the great masters abound.

As it was through the unsolicited favour of the Duke of Grafton that Mr. Gray was enabled to follow the bent of his own inclination in the choice of his studies, we shall not be surprised to find, that on his Grace's being elected Chancellor of the University, Mr. Gray, unasked, took upon him to write those verses which are usually set to music on this occasion *; and whatever the sarcastic Junius (notwithstanding his handsome compliment to the poet) might pretend, this was the offering of no venal Muse. The ode in its structure is dramatic, and it contains nothing of the complimentary kind which is not entirely suited to the characters employed.

Not long after the bustle of the installation was over, Mr. Gray made an excursion to the seques-

* See p. 48.
tered lakes of Westmoreland and Cumberland. The impressions he there received from the wonderful scenery that everywhere surrounded him he transmitted to his friend Dr. Wharton, in epistolary journals, with all the wildness of Salvator and the softness of Claude. Writing, in May 1771, to the same friend, he complains of a violent cough which had troubled him for three months, and which he called incurable, adding, that till this year he never knew what (mechanical) low spirits were. One circumstance that without doubt contributed to the latter complaint, was the anxiety he felt from holding as a sinecure an office the duties of which he thought himself bound to perform. The object of his professorship being two-fold, and the patent allowing him to effect one of its designs by deputy, it is understood that he liberally rewarded for that purpose the teachers in the University of Italian and French. The other part he himself prepared to execute; but though the professorship was instituted in 1724, none of his predecessors had furnished a plan. Embarrassed by this and other difficulties, and retarded by ill health, the undertaking at length became so irksome, that he seriously proposed to relinquish the chair.

Towards the close of May he removed from Cambridge to town, after having suffered from flying attacks of an hereditary gout, to which he had long been subject, and from which a life of singular temperance could not protect him. In London his indisposition having increased, the physician advised him to change his lodgings in Jermyn-street for others at Kensington. This change was of so much benefit, that he was soon enabled to return to Cambridge, whence he meditated a journey to his friend Dr. Wharton, which he hoped might re-establish his health; but his intentions and hopes were delusive. On the 24th of July, 1771, a violent sickness came on him while at dinner in the College-hall; the gout had fixed on his stomach, and resisted all the power of medicine. On the 29th he was seized by a strong convulsion, which the next day returned with additional force, and the evening after he expired.
At the first seizure he was aware of his danger, and though sensible at intervals almost to the last, he betrayed no dread of the terrors of death.

To the foregoing sketch of the Life of Mr. Gray I shall annex a delineation of his Character, which appeared originally in "The London Magazine" for March 1772, and is said by Dr. Johnson to have been written by the Rev. Mr. Temple, rector of St. Gluvias in Cornwall*.

"Perhaps he was the most learned man in Europe. He was equally acquainted with the elegant and profound parts of science, and that not superficially but thoroughly. He knew every branch of history, both natural and civil; had read all the original historians of England, France, and Italy; and was a great antiquarian. Criticism, metaphysics, morals, and politics, made a principal part of his plan of study; voyages and travels of all sorts were his favourite amusement: and he had a fine taste in painting, prints, architecture, and gardening*. With such a fund of knowledge, his conversation must have been equally instructing and entertaining; but he was also a good man, a well-bred man, a man of virtue and humanity. There is no character without some imperfection; and I think the greatest defect in his was an affectation in delicacy, or rather effeminacy †, and a visible fastidiousness, or contempt and disdain of his inferiors in science. He also had in some degree that weakness which disgusted Voltaire so much in Mr. Congreve‡: though he

* In the London Magazine for May 1775, and the Gentleman's Magazine for June 1775, he is styled rector of Mamhead in Devonshire.

* He disclaimed any skill in this art, and usually held it in less estimation than I think it deserves, declaring himself to be only charmed with the bolder features of unadorned nature.—Mason.

† This is rightly put; it was rather an affectation in delicacy and effeminacy than the things themselves; and he chose to put on this appearance chiefly before persons whom he did not wish to please.—Mason.

‡ I have often thought that Mr. Congreve might very well be vindicated on this head. It seldom happens that the vanity of authorship continues to the end of a man's days; it usually soon leaves him where it found him; and if he has not something better to build his self-approval upon than that of being a popular writer, he generally finds himself ill at ease, if respected only on that account. Mr. Congreve was much advanced in years when the young French poet paid him this seemed to value others, chiefly according to the progress they had made in knowledge*, yet he could not bear to be considered himself merely as a man of letters: and though without birth, or fortune, or station, his desire was to be looked upon as a private independent gentleman, who read for his amusement. Perhaps, it may be said, What signifies so much knowledge, when it produced so little? Is it worth taking so much pains to leave no memorial but a few poems? But let it be considered, that Mr. Gray was to others, at least innocently employed; to himself, certainly beneficially. His time passed agreeably; he was every day making some new acquisition in science; visit; and, though a man of the world, he might now feel that indifference to literary fame which Mr. Gray, who always led a more retired and philosophic life, certainly felt much earlier. Both of them therefore might reasonably, at times, express some disgust, if their quiet was intruded upon by persons who thought they flattered them by such intrusion.—Mason.

* It was not on account of their knowledge that he valued mankind. He contempt indeed all pretenders to literature, but he did not select his friends from the literary class merely because they were literate. To be his friend it was always either necessary that a man should have something better than an improved understanding, or at least that Mr. Gray should believe he had.—Mason.
his mind was enlarged, his heart softened, his virtue strengthened; the world and mankind were shewn to him without a mask; and he was taught to consider every thing as trifling, and unworthy the attention of a wise man, except the pursuit of knowledge, and the practice of virtue, in that state wherein God hath placed us."

Dr. Johnson's general opinion of Mr. Gray is expressed in the following terms: "What has occurred to me is, that his mind had a large grasp; that his curiosity was unlimited, and his judgment cultivated; that he was a man likely to love much where he loved at all, but that he was fastidious and hard to please. His contempt, however, is often employed, where I hope it will be approved, upon scepticism and infidelity. His short account of Shaftesbury I will insert.

' You say you cannot conceive how Lord Shaftesbury came to be a philosopher in vogue;
' I will tell you: first, he was a lord; secondly, he was as vain as any of his readers; thirdly, men are very prone to believe what they do not understand; fourthly, they will believe any thing at all, provided they are under no obligation to believe it; fifthly, they love to take a new road, even when that road leads nowhere; sixthly, he was reckoned a fine writer, and seems always to mean more than he said. Would you have any more reasons? An interval of above forty years has pretty well destroyed the charm. A dead lord ranks with commoners; vanity is no longer interested in the matter; for a new road is become an old one.'

"As a writer he had this peculiarity, that he did not write his pieces first rudely, and then correct them, but laboured every line as it arose in the train of composition; and he had a notion not very peculiar, that he could not write but at certain times, or at happy moments; a fantastic foppery, to which my kindness for a man of learning and of virtue wishes him to have been superior."
THE

LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT

OF

MR. THOMAS GRAY*;

EXTRACTED FROM

The Registry of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury.

IN THE NAME OF GOD, AMEN. I THOMAS GRAY, of Pembroke-hall, in the university of Cambridge, being of sound mind, and in good health of body, yet ignorant how long these blessings may be indulged me, Do make this my last will and testament in manner and form following: First, I do desire that my body may be deposited

* All the preceding Editions of Gray's Works having contained this Copy of his Will, I have been induced to adopt it, and thereby avoid the charge of imperfection; though, in fact, I see no part of it that so far distinguishes it from the most ordinary legal document of the kind, as to make it an article of curiosity to any reader.
in the vault made by my late dear mother in the church-yard of Stoke-Pogeis, near Slough, in Buckinghamshire, near her remains, in a coffin of seasoned oak, neither lined nor covered, and (unless it be very inconvenient) I could wish that one of my Executors may see me laid in the grave, and distribute among such honest and industrious poor persons in the said parish as he thinks fit, the sum of ten pounds in charity. Next, I give to George Williamson, Esq. my second cousin by the father’s side, now of Calcutta in Bengal, the sum of five hundred pounds, Reduced Bank Annuities, now standing in my name. I give to Anna Lady Goring, also my second cousin by the father’s side, of the county of Sussex, five hundred pounds, Reduced Bank Annuities, and a pair of large blue and white old Japan china jars. Item, I give to Mary Antrobus, of Cambridge, spinster, my second cousin by the mother’s side, all that my freehold estate and house in the parish of St. Michael, Cornhill, London, now let at the yearly rent of sixty-five pounds, and in the occupation of Mr. Nortghe, perfumer, provided that she pay out of the said rent, by half-yearly payments, to Mrs. Jane Olliffe, my aunt, of Cambridge, widow, the sum of Twenty pounds per annum, during her natural life; and after the decease of the said Jane Olliffe, I give the said estate to the said Mary Antrobus, To Have and To Hold, to her, her heirs and assigns for ever. Further, I bequeath to the said Mary Antrobus the sum of six hundred pounds, New South-Sea Annuities, now standing in the joint names of Jane Olliffe and Thomas Gray, but charged with the payment of five pounds per annum, to Graves Stokeley, of Stoke-Pogeis, in the county of Bucks; which sum of six hundred pounds, after the decease of the said annuitant, does (by the will of Anne Rogers, my late aunt) belong solely and entirely to me; together with all overplus of interest in the meantime accruing. Further, if at the time of my decease there shall be any arrear of salary due to me from his Majesty's treasury, I give all such arrears to the said Mary Antrobus. Item, I give to Mrs. Dorothy Comyns, of Cambridge, my other second cousin by the mother's side, the sums of six hundred pounds, Old South-Sea Annuities; of three hundred pounds, Four per Cent. Bank Annuities Consolidated; and of two hundred pounds Three per Cent. Bank Annuities Consolidated; all now standing in my name. I give to Richard Stonehewer, Esq. one of his Majesty's Commissioners of Excise, the sum of five hundred pounds, Reduced Bank Annuities; and I beg his acceptance of one of my diamond rings. I give to Dr. Thomas Wharton, of Old Park, in the bishopric of Durham, five hundred pounds, Reduced Bank Annuities; and desire him also to accept of one of my diamond rings. I give to my servant, Stephen Hempstead, the sum of fifty pounds, Reduced Bank Annuities; and if he continues in my service to the time of my death, I also give him all my wearing apparel and linen. I give to my two cousins above-mentioned, Mary Antrobus and Dorothy Comyns, all my plate, watches, rings, china ware, bed linen, and table linen, and the furniture of my chambers at Cambridge, not otherwise bequeathed, to be equally and amicably shared between them. I give to the Reverend William Mason, Precentor of York, all my books, manuscripts, coins, music, printed or written, and papers of all kinds, to preserve or destroy at his own discretion: And after my just debts and the expences of my funeral are discharged, all the residue of my personal estate whatsoever I do hereby give and bequeath to the said Reverend William Mason, and to the Reverend Mr. James Browne, President of Pembroke-hall, Cambridge, to be equally divided between them: desiring them to apply the sum of two hundred pounds to an use of charity, concerning which I have already informed them: and I do hereby constitute and appoint them, the said William Mason and James Browne, to be joint executors of this my last will and testament. And if any relation of mine, or other legatee, shall go about to molest, or commence any suit against, my said executors in the execution of their office, I do, as far as the law will permit me, hereby revoke and make void all such bequests or legacies, as I had given to that person or persons, and give it to be divided between my said executors and residuary legatees, whose integrity and kindness I have so long experienced, and who can best judge of my true intention and meaning. In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal, this second day of July, 1770.

THOMAS GRAY.

Signed, sealed, published, and declared by the said Thomas Gray, the testator, as, and for, his last will and testament, in the presence of us; who in his presence, and at his request, and in the presence of each other, have signed our names as witnesses hereto,

RICHARD BAKER,
THOMAS WILSON,
JOSEPH TURNER.
Proved at London the twelfth of August, 1771, before the Worshipful Andrew Coltre Ducarel, Doctor of Laws, and Surrogate, by the oaths of the Reverend William Mason, Clerk, Master of Arts, and the Reverend James Browne, Clerk, Master of Arts, the executors; to whom administration was granted, having been first sworn duly to administer.

John Stevens, Henry Stevens, Deputy Registers.
Geo. Gostling, jun.
POEMS

OF

MR. GRAY.
Ode on the Spring

So where the rosy bosom’d hours...
ODES.

ON THE SPRING.

[The title originally given by Mr. Gray to this Ode was "Noontide."]

Lo! where the rosy-bosom'd Hours,
Fair Venus' train, appear,
Disclose the long-expected flowers,
And wake the purple year!
The Attic warbler pours her throat,
Responsive to the cuckow's note,
The untaught harmony of spring:
While, whisp'ring pleasure as they fly,
Cool Zephyrs thro' the clear blue sky
Their gather'd fragrance fling.

B 2
Where'er the oak's thick branches stretch
A broader browner shade,
Where'er the rude and moss-grown beech
O'er-canopies the glade (a) *,
Beside some water's rushy brink
With me the Muse shall sit, and think
(At ease reclin'd in rustic state)
How vain the ardour of the Crowd,
How low, how little are the Proud,
How indigent the Great! [1] *

(a) O'er-canopies the glade.

* The Notes referred to by Italic letters between parentheses (a) (b) &c. are Mr. Gray's. Those referred to by Figures between brackets [1][2] &c. are chiefly selected from the Criticisms and Commentaries of Dr. Johnson, Mr. Mason, Mr. Scott, of Amwell, and various other writers. Among them are occasionally interspersed a few remarks by the Editor; but these are not of importance enough to be distinguished.

[1] Variation:—How low, how indigent the Proud;
How little are the Great.

Thus it stood in Dodsley's Miscellany, wherein it was first published. The author corrected it on account of the point of little and great. It certainly had too much the appearance of a Concetto, though it expressed his meaning better than the present reading.
Still is the toiling hand of Care;
The panting herds repose:
Yet hark, how thro' the peopled air
The busy murmur glows!
The insect youth are on the wing,
Eager to taste the honied spring,
And float amid the liquid noon: (b)
Some lightly o'er the current skim,
Some shew their gaily-gilded trim
Quick-glancing to the sun (c).

To Contemplation's sober eye (d)
Such is the race of Man:
And they that creep, and they that fly,
Shall end where they began.

(b) And float amid the liquid noon.
Nare per æstatem liquidam—
Virgil Georg. lib. 4.

(c) Quick glancing to the sun.
—sporting with quick glance,
Shew to the sun their wav'd coats dropt with gold.

(d) To Contemplation's sober eye.
While insects from the threshold preach, &c.
M. Green, in the Grotto.
Alike the Busy and the Gay
But flutter thro' life's little day,
   In Fortune's varying colours drest:
Brush'd by the hand of rough Mischance,
Or chill'd by Age, their airy dance
   They leave, in dust to rest.

Methinks I hear, in accents low,
   The sportive kind reply:
Poor Moralist! and what art thou?
   A solitary fly!
Thy joys no glitt'ring female meets,
No hive hast thou of hoarded sweets,
   No painted plumage to display:
On hasty wings thy youth is flown;
Thy sun is set, thy spring is gone—
   We frolic while 'tis May.
ON

THE DEATH OF A FAVOURITE CAT,

DROWNED IN A TUB OF GOLD FISHES. [2]

'Twas on a lofty vase's side,
Where China's gayest art had dy'd
The azure flowers, that blow;
Demurest of the tabby kind,
The pensive Selima, reclin'd,
Gaz'd on the lake below.

Her conscious tail her joy declar'd;
The fair round face, the snowy beard,
The velvet of her paws,
Her coat, that with the tortoise vies,
Her ears of jet, and emerald eyes,
She saw; and purr'd applause.

[2] Mr. Walpole, after the death of Mr. Gray, placed the China vase in question on a pedestal at Strawberry-Hill, with the first four lines of the Ode for its inscription.
'Twas on this Vase's lofty side, &c.
Still had she gaz'd; but 'midst the tide
Two angel forms were seen to glide,[3]
The Genii of the stream:
Their scaly armour's Tyrian hue
Thro' richest purple to the view
Betray'd a golden gleam.

The hapless Nymph with wonder saw:
A whisker first, and then a claw,
With many an ardent wish,
She stretch'd, in vain, to reach the prize.
What female heart can gold despise?
What Cat's averse to fish?

Presumptuous Maid! with looks intent
Again she stretch'd, again she bent,
Nor knew the gulf between.
(Malignant Fate sat by, and smil'd)
The slipp'ry verge her feet beguil'd,
She tumbled headlong in.

First edition in Dodsley's Misc.
Eight times emerging from the flood
She mew'd to ev'ry wat'ry God,
    Some speedy aid to send.
No Dolphin came, no Nereid stirr'd:
Nor cruel Tom, nor Susan heard.
    A Fav'rite has no friend!

From hence, ye Beauties, undeceiv'd,
Know, one false step is ne'er retriev'd,
    And be with caution bold.
Not all that tempts your wand'ring eyes
And heedless hearts is lawful prize,
    Nor all that glisters gold.
ON A

DISTANT PROSPECT OF ETON COLLEGE.

"Αἰθέρως ἴκνου ἰπόφασις εἰς τὸ ἐνυγχίαν.
MENANDER.

[This was the first English production of Mr. Gray that appeared in print, and was published in folio, by Dodsley, in 1747. About the same time, at Mr. Walpole's request, Mr. Gray sat for his picture to Echart; in which, on a paper which he held in his hand, Mr. Walpole wrote the title of this Ode; and to intimate his own high and just opinion of it, as a first production, he added this line of Lucan by way of motto:

Nec licuit populis parvum te, Nile, videre.
Pharsalia, lib. x. l. 296.]

Ye distant spires, ye antique towers,
That crown the wat'ry glade,
Where grateful Science still adores
Her Henry's holy shade (e);
And ye, that from the stately brow
Of Windsor's heights th' expanse below
Of grove, of lawn, of mead survey,
Whose turf, whose shade, whose flowers among Wanders the hoary Thames along
His silver-winding way:

(e) King Henry the Sixth, founder of the College.
Ah, happy hills! ah, pleasing shade!
    Ah, fields belov'd in vain!
Where once my careless childhood stray'd,
    A stranger yet to pain!
I feel the gales that from ye blow
A momentary bliss bestow,
    As waving fresh their gladsome wing,
My weary soul they seem to sooth,
And, redolent of joy and youth (f),
    To breathe a second spring.

Say, Father Thames, for thou hast seen
    Full many a sprightly race
Disporting on thy margent green
    The paths of pleasure trace;
Who foremost now delight to cleave,
With pliant arm, thy glassy wave?
    The captive linnet which enthral?
What idle progeny succeed
To chase the rolling circle's speed,
    Or urge the flying ball?

(f) And, redolent of joy and youth,
    And bees their honey redolent of spring.
Dryden's Fable on the Pythag. System.
While some on earnest business bent
Their murm'ring labours ply
'Gainst graver hours, that bring constraint
To sweeten liberty:
Some bold adventurers disdain
The limits of their little reign,
And unknown regions dare descry:
Still as they run they look behind,
They hear a voice in every wind,
And snatch a fearful joy.

Gay hope is theirs by Fancy fed,
Less pleasing when possest;
The tear forgot as soon as shed,
The sunshine of the breast:
Theirs buxom Health, of rosy hue,
Wild Wit, Invention ever-new,
And lively Cheer, of Vigour born;
The thoughtless day, the easy night,
The spirits pure, the slumbers light,
That fly th' approach of morn.
Alas! regardless of their doom
   The little victims play!
No sense have they of ills to come,
   Nor care beyond to-day:
Yet see, how all around 'em wait
The Ministers of human fate,
   And black Misfortune's baleful train!
Ah, show them where in ambush stand,
To seize their prey, the murd'rous band!
   Ah, tell them they are men!

These shall the fury Passions tear,
   The vultures of the mind,
Disdainful Anger, palid Fear,
   And Shame that sculks behind;
Or pining Love shall waste their youth,
Or Jealousy, with rankling tooth,
   That inly gnaws the secret heart;
And Envy wan, and faded Care,
Grim-visag'd comfortless Despair,
   And Sorrow's piercing dart.
Ambition this shall tempt to rise,
    Then whirl the wretch from high,
To bitter Scorn a sacrifice,
    And grinning Infamy.
The stings of Falsehood those shall try,
And hard Unkindness' alter'd eye [4],
    That mocks the tear it forc'd to flow;
And keen Remorse with blood desil'd,
And moody Madness laughing wild (g)
    Amid severest woe.

Lo, in the Vale of Years beneath
    A grisly troop are seen,
The painful family of Death,
    More hideous than their Queen:

The elision here, observes Mr. Mason, is ungraceful, and hurts this otherwise beautiful line: One of the same kind in the second line of the first Ode makes the same blemish; but I think they are the only two to be found in this correct writer; and I mention them here that succeeding Poets may not look upon them as authorities. The judicious reader will not suppose that I would condemn all elisions of the genitive case, by this stricture on those which are terminated by rough consonants. Many there are which the ear readily admits, and which use has made familiar to it.

(g) And moody Madness laughing wild.
    And Madness laughing in his iverful mood.
Dryden's Fable of Palamon and Arcite.
This racks the joints, this fires the veins,
That every labouring sinew strains,
Those in the deeper vitals rage:
Lo, Poverty, to fill the band,
That numbs the soul with icy hand,
And slow-consuming Age.

To each his suff'ring: all are men,
Condemn'd alike to groan;
The tender for another's pain,
Th' unfeeling for his own.
Yet, ah! why should they know their fate,
Since sorrow never comes too late,
And happiness too swiftly flies?
Thought would destroy their paradise.
No more;—where ignorance is bliss,
'Tis folly to be wise.
TO ADVERSITY.

Δίνα

Τὸν φροῦναν Βροτούς οδώσαντα, τῷ πάθει μεθ’ ἐν
Θέντα κυρίως ἔχειν.
AESCHYLUS, in Agamemnon.

[This Ode was originally published in Dodsley's Miscellany, under the title of a "Hymn to Adversity." Dr. Johnson says, the hint of the Poem was first taken from "O Diva, gratum quæ Regis Antium;" but Gray has excelled his original by the variety of his sentiments, and by their moral application. "Of this piece," adds the rigid Censor, "at once poetical and rational, I will not by slight obtections violate the dignity."—What is this, after all, but to "damn "with faint praise?"

D
AUGHTER of Jove, relentless power,
Thou tamer of the human breast,
Whose iron scourge and tort'ring hour
The bad affright, afflict the best!
Bound in thy adamantine chain,
The proud are taught to taste of pain,
And purple tyrants vainly groan
With pangs unfelt before, unpitied and alone.
When first thy sire to send on earth
Virtue, his darling child, design'd,
To thee he gave the heav'ly birth,
And bade to form her infant mind.
Stern rugged nurse! thy rigid lore
With patience many a year she bore:
What sorrow was, thou bad'st her know,
And from her own she learn'd to melt at others' woe.

Scar'd at thy frown terrific, fly
Self-pleasing Folly's idle brood,
Wild Laughter, Noise, and thoughtless Joy,
And leave us leisure to be good.
Light they disperse; and with them go
The summer friend, the flatt'ring foe;
By vain Prosperity receiv'd,
To her they vow their truth, and are again believ'd.

Wisdom in sable garb array'd,
Immers'd in rapt'rous thought profound,
And Melancholy, silent maid,
With leaden eye that loves the ground,
Still, on thy solemn steps attend:
Warm Charity, the general friend,
With Justice, to herself severe,
And Pity, dropping soft the sadly-pleasing tear.

Oh, gently on thy suppliant's head,
Dread Goddess, lay thy chast'ning hand!
Not in thy Gorgon terrors clad,
Not circled with the vengeful band
(As by the impious thou art seen)
With thund'ring voice, and threat'ning mien,
With screaming Horror's funeral cry,
Despair, and fell Disease, and ghastly Poverty:

Thy form benign, oh Goddess! wear,
Thy milder influence impart,
Thy philosophic train be there
To soften, not to wound my heart.
The gen'rous spark extinct revive,
Teach me to love, and to forgive,
Exact my own defects to scan,
What others are to feel, and know myself a man.
THE PROGRESS OF POESY.

A PINDARIC ODE.

Φωνάντα συνετάσιον ἵς
Δὲ τὸ τῶν ἔρμονέων
Χωτίζει.

PINDAR, Olymp. II.

[This highly-finished Ode describes the power and influence as well as the progress of Poetry.]

I. 1.

AWAKE, Æolian lyre, awake (2),
And give to rapture all thy trembling strings.
From Helicon's harmonious springs
A thousand rills their mazy progress take:

(h) Awake, Æolian lyre, awake.
Awake, my glory: awake, lute and harp.

David's Psalms.

Pindar styles his own poetry, with its musical accompaniments, Αἰολίς μολῆ Αἰολίδες χορδαί, Αἰολίδων πνευμα αὐλῶν, Æolian song, Æolian strings, the breath of the Æolian flute.

The subject and simile, as usual with Pindar, are here united. The various sources of poetry, which gives life and lustre to all it touches, are here described; as well in its quiet majestic progress enriching every subject (otherwise dry and barren) with all the pomp of diction, and luxuriant harmony of numbers; as in its more rapid and irresistible course, when swoln and hurried away by the conflict of tumultuous passions.
The laughing flowers, that round them blow,
Drink life and fragrance as they flow.
Now the rich stream of Music winds along,
Deep, majestic, smooth, and strong,
Thro' verdant vales, and Ceres' golden reign:
Now rolling down the steep amain,
Headlong, impetuous, see it pour:
The rocks and nodding groves re-bellow to the roar.

I. 2.

Oh! Sovereign of the willing soul (i),
Parent of sweet and solemn-breathing airs,
Enchanting shell! the sullen Cares
And frantic Passions hear thy soft control.
On Thracia's hills the Lord of War
Has curb'd the fury of his car,
And drop'd his thirsty lance at thy command.
Perching on the sceptred hand (k)

(i) Oh! Sovereign of the willing soul.
Power of harmony to calm the turbulent passions of the soul. The thoughts are borrowed from the first Pythian of Pindar.

(k) Perching on the sceptred hand.
This is a weak imitation of some beautiful lines in the same ode.
Of Jove, thy magic lulls the feather'd king
With ruffled plumes and flagging wing:
Quench'd in dark clouds of slumber lie
The terror of his beak, and lightnings of his eye.

I. 3.

Thee the voice, the dance, obey (l),
Temper'd to thy warbled lay.
O' er Idalia's velvet-green
The rosy-crowned Loves are seen
On Cytherea's day
With antic Sport, and blue-ey'd Pleasures,
Frisking light in frolic measures;
Now pursuing, now retreating,
Now in circling troops they meet:
To brisk notes in cadence beating,
Glance their many-twinkling feet (m).

(l) Thee the voice, the dance obey.
Power of harmony to produce all the graces of motion in the body.

(m) Glance their many-twinkling feet.
Μαρμαρολός Ἰνεῖτο σωδών Ιαύραζε ὑ ὁμιῶ. Homer, Od. Ο.
Slow melting strains their Queen's approach declare [5]:

Where'er she turns the Graces homage pay. [6]

With arms sublime, that float upon the air,
In gliding state she wins her easy way:
O'er her warm cheek, and rising bosom, move
The bloom of young Desire and purple light of Love. (n)

[5] Slow melting strains their Queen's approach declare.

This and the five flowing lines which follow are (as Mr. Mason observes) sweetly introduced by the short and unequal measures that precede them: the whole stanza is indeed a master-piece of rhythm, and charms the ear by its well-varied cadence, as much as the imagery which it contains ravishes the fancy. "There is" (says Mr. Gray in one of his manuscript papers) "a tout ensemble of sound, as well as of sense, in poetical composition always necessary to its perfection. "What is gone before still dwells upon the ear, and insensibly harmonicizes with the present line, as in that succession of fleeting notes which is called Melody." Nothing can better exemplify the truth of this fine observation than his own poetry.

[6] This line seems to have been imitated from Dryden's Fable of the Flower and the Leaf:

"For wheresoe'er she turn'd her face they bow'd."

(n) The bloom of young Desire, and purple light of Love.

Δάμπριί δ' ἐπὶ μάρφαρένου Παρένου φῶς ἐγὼν.

Phrynicus apud Athenæum.
II. 1.

Man's feeble race what ills await (o)!
Labour, and Penury, the racks of Pain,
Disease, and Sorrow's weeping Train,
And Death, sad refuge from the storms of Fate!
The fond complaint, my song, disprove,
And justify the laws of Jove.
Say, has he giv'n in vain the heav'nly Muse?
Night and all her sickly dews,
Her Spectres wan, and birds of boding cry,
He gives to range the dreary sky:
Till down the eastern cliffs afar (p)
Hyperion's march they spy, and glitt'ring shafts of war [7]

(o) Man's feeble race what ills await!
To compensate the real or imaginary ills of life, the Muse was given us by the same Providence that sends the day, by its cheerful presence to dispel the gloom and terrors of the night.

(p) Till down the eastern cliff's afar.
Or seen the Morning's well-appointed star
Come marching up the eastern hills afar.
Cowley.

[7] An anonymous writer suggests, that Mr. Gray has here been indebted to Euripides Phænissa, ver. 173.
 Lotus in omnia philétov
 Βολαίος οἰείν.
II. 2.

In climes beyond the solar road (q),
Where shaggy forms o'er ice-built mountains roam,
The Muse has broke the twilight-gloom
To cheer the shivering Native's dull abode.
And oft, beneath the od'rous shade
Of Chili's boundless forests laid,
She deigns to hear the savage Youth repeat
In loose numbers wildly sweet
Their feather-cinctur'd Chiefs, and dusky Loves.
Her track, where'er the Goddess roves,
Glory pursue, and generous Shame,
Th' unconquerable Mind, and Freedom's holy flame.

(q) In climes beyond the solar road.

Extensive influence of poetic genius over the remotest and most uncivilized nations: its connection with liberty, and the virtues that naturally attend on it. [See the Erse, Norwegian, and Welsh Fragments, the Lapland and American songs, &c.]

"Extra anni solisque vias—"

Virgil.

"Tutta lontana dal camin del sole,"

Petrarch, Canzon. 2.
II. 3.

Woods, that wave o'er Delphi's steep (r),
Isles, that crown th' Ægean deep,
Fields, that cool Ilissus laves,
Or where Mæander's amber waves
In lingering Lab'rinths creep,
How do your tuneful Echoes languish,
Mute, but to the voice of Anguish!
Where each old poetic Mountain
Inspiration breath'd around;
Ev'ry shade and hallow'd Fountain
Murmur'd deep a solemn sound:
Till the sad Nine, in Greece's evil hour,
Left their Parnassus for the Latian plains.
Alike they scorn the pomp of tyrant Power,
And coward Vice, that revels in her chains.

(r) Woods that wave o'er Delphi's steep.

Progress of Poetry from Greece to Italy, and from Italy to England. Chaucer was not unacquainted with the writings of Dante or of Petrarch. The Earl of Surry and Sir Thomas Wyatt had travelled in Italy, and formed their taste there. Spenser imitated the Italian writers, and Milton improved on them; but this school expired soon after the Restoration, and a new one arose on the French model, which has subsisted ever since.
When Latium had her lofty spirit lost,
They sought, oh Albion! next thy sea-encircled coast.

III. 1. [8]
Far from the sun and summer-gale,
In thy green lap was Nature's Darling (s) laid,
What time, where lucid Avon stray'd,
To him the mighty Mother did unveil
Her awful face: The dauntless Child
Stretch'd forth his little arms, and smil'd.

[8] An ingenious person, (as Mr. Mason tells us) who sent Mr. Gray his remarks anonymously on this and the following Ode soon after they were published, gives this stanza and the following a very just and well-expressed eulogy: "A Poet is perhaps never more conciliating "than when he praises favourite predecessors in his art. Milton is "not more the pride than Shakespeare the love of their country: It is "therefore equally judicious to diffuse a tenderness and a grace through "the praise of Shakespeare, as to extol in a strain more elevated and "sonorous the boundless roarings of Milton's epic imagination." The critic has here well noted the beauty of contrast which results from the two descriptions; yet it is further to be observed, to the honour of our Poet's judgment, that the tenderness and grace in the former does not prevent it from strongly characterizing the three capital perfections of Shakespeare's genius; and when he describes his power of exciting terror (a species of the sublime) he ceases to be diffuse, and becomes, as he ought to be, concise and energetic.

(s) Nature's darling.
Shakespeare.
This pencil take (she said), whose colours clear
Richly paint the vernal year:
Thine too these golden keys, immortal Boy!
This can unlock the gates of Joy;
Of Horror that, and thrilling Fears,
Or ope the sacred source of sympathetic Tears.

III. 2.
Nor second He, that rode sublime (t)
Upon the seraph-wings of Ecstasy,
The secrets of th' Abyss to spy.
He pass'd the flaming bounds of Place and Time (u):
The living Throne, the sapphire-blaze (x),
Where Angels tremble while they gaze,

(t) Nor second he, that rode sublime.
Milton.

(u) He pass'd the flaming bounds of Place and Time.
"—flammantia mænia mundi."
Lucretius.

(x) The living throne, the sapphire blaze.
For the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels.—And above the firmament that was over their heads, was the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone.—This was the appearance of the glory of the Lord. Ezekiel i. 20, 26, 28.
He saw; but, blasted with excess of light [9],
Clos’d his eyes in endless night (γ).
Behold, where Dryden’s less presumptuous car
Wide o’er the fields of Glory bear
Two Coursers of ethereal race (τ),
With necks in thunder cloth’d, and long-resounding pace (α).

III. 3.

Hark, his hands the lyre explore!
Bright-ey’d Fancy, hovering o’er,
Scatters from her pictur’d urn
Thoughts that breathe, and words that burn (β).

[9] Johnson allows this account of Milton’s blindness to be “happily imagined.”

(γ) Clos’d his eyes in endless night.
Οφθαλμών μὲν ἀμέμπτως, εἶδον δ’ ἡδέων ἀμοίβη.
Hom. Od.

(τ) Two coursers of ethereal race.
Meant to express the stately march and sounding energy of Dryden’s rhymes.

(α) With necks in thunder cloth’d, and long-resounding pace.
Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?
Job.

(β) Thoughts that breathe, and words that burn.
Words that weep, and tears that speak.
Cowley.
But ah! 'tis heard no more (c)—

Oh! Lyre divine, what daring Spirit
Wakes thee now? Tho' he inherit
Nor the pride, nor ample pinion,
That the Theban Eagle bear (d),
Sailing with supreme dominion
Thro' the azure deep of air:
Yet oft before his infant eyes would run
Such forms as glitter in the Muse's ray
With orient hues, unborrow'd of the Sun [1]:
Yet shall he mount, and keep his distant way

(c) But ah! 'tis heard no more—
We have had in our language no other odes of the sublime kind, than that of Dryden on St. Cecilia's day: for Cowley, who had his merit, yet wanted judgment, style, and harmony, for such a task. That of Pope is not worthy of so great a man. Mr. Mason indeed, of late days, has touched the true chords, and with a masterly hand, in some of his choruses,—above all in the last of Caractacus:
Hark! heard ye not yon footstep dread? &c.

(d) That the Theban Eagle bear.
Διὸς ὄρεις ἐρυγχόε θείον. Olymp. 2. Pindar compares himself to that bird, and his enemies to ravens that croak and clamour in vain below, while it pursues its flight, regardless of their noise.

[1] This passage seems borrowed from the following in Sir William Temple's Essay on Poetry, in his Miscellanies. Speaking of the qualities
Beyond the limits of a vulgar fate,
Beneath the Good how far—but far above the Great.

of a poet, "there must be," says he, "a spritely imagination or fancy, "fertile in a thousand productions, ranging over infinite ground, "piercing into every corner, and, by the light of that true poetical fire, "discovering a thousand little bodies or images in the world, and "similitudes among them, unseen to common eyes, and which could "not be discovered without the rays of that sun."
THE BARD.

A PINDARIC ODE. [1]

[This Ode is founded on a Tradition current in Wales, that Edward the First, when he completed the conquest of that country, ordered all the Bards that fell into his hands to be put to death.]

I. 1.

"RUIN seize thee, ruthless King [1]!

"Confusion on thy banners wait;

"Tho' fann'd by Conquest's crimson wing,

"They mock the air with idle state (e).

[1] "The Bard" (says Johnson) appears, at the first view, to be, as Algarotti and others have remarked, an imitation of the prophecy of Nereus. Algarotti thinks it superior to its original, and, if preference depends only on the imagery and animation of the two poems, his judgment is right. There is in 'The Bard' more force, more thought, and more variety."

[2] Of this noble exordium, an anonymous Critic thus eloquently expresses his admiration: "This abrupt execration plunges the reader into that sudden fearful perplexity which is designed to predominate through the whole. The irresistible violence of the prophet's passions bears him away, who, as he is unprepared by a formal ushering-in of the speaker, is unfortified against the impressions of his poetical phrenzy and overpowered by them, as sudden thunders strike the deepest."

(e) They mock the air with idle state!
Mocking the air with colours idly spread.

Shakespeare's King John.
"Helm, nor Hauberks twisted mail (f),
"Nor e’en thy virtues, Tyrant, shall avail
"To save thy secret soul from nightly fears,
"From Cambria’s curse, from Cambria’s tears!"
Such were the sounds that o’er the crested pride (g)
Of the first Edward scatter’d wild dismay,
As down the steep of Snowdon’s shaggy side (h)
He wound with toilsome march his long array.

(f) Helm, nor Hauberks twisted mail.
The Hauberk was a texture of steel ringlets, or rings interwoven, forming a coat of mail that sat close to the body, and adapted itself to every motion.

(g) the crested pride.
The crested adder’s pride.

Dryden’s Indian Queen.

(h) As down the steep of Snowdon’s shaggy side.

Snowdon was a name given by the Saxons to that mountainous tract which the Welsh themselves call Craigian-eryri: it included all the highlands of Caernarvonshire and Merionethshire, as far as the river Conway. R. Hygden, speaking of the castle of Conway, built there by King Edward the First, says, "Ad ortum annis Conway ad clivum "montis Erey;" and Matthew of Westminster, (ad ann. 1283) "Apud "Aberconway ad pedes montis Snowdoniae fecit erigo castrum "forte."
Stout Glo’ster stood aghast (i) in speechless trance: To arms! cried Mortimer (k), and couch’d his quiv’ring lance.

I. 2.

On a rock, whose haughty brow Frowns o’er old Conway’s foaming flood, Rob’d in the sable garb of woe, With haggard eyes the Poet stood; (Loose his beard, and hoary hair (l) Stream’d, like a meteor (m), to the troubled air) [3]

(i) Stout Glo’ster stood aghast——
Gilbert de Clare, surnamed the Red, Earl of Gloucester and Hertford, son-in-law to King Edward.

(k) To arms! cried Mortimer——
Edmond de Mortimer, Lord of Wigmore.

They both were Lords Marchers, whose lands lay on the borders of Wales, and probably accompanied the King in this expedition.

(l) Loose his beard, and hoary hair.

The image was taken from a well-known picture of Raphael, representing the Supreme Being in the vision of Ezekiel. There are two of these paintings, both believed original, one at Florence, the other at Paris.

(m) Stream’d, like a meteor, to the troubled air. Shone, like a meteor, streaming to the wind.

Milton’s Paradise Lost.

[3] Moses breaking the tables of the law, by Parmegiano, was a figure which Mr. Gray used to say came still nearer to his meaning than the picture of Raphael.
And with a Master’s hand, and Prophet’s fire,
Struck the deep sorrows of his lyre.

"Hark, how each giant-oak, and desert-cave,
  "Sighs to the torrent’s awful voice beneath!
  "O’er thee, oh King! their hundred arms they "wave,
  "Revenge on thee in hoarser murmurs breathe;
  "Vocal no more, since Cambria’s fatal day,
  "To high-born Hoel’s harp, or soft Llewellyn’s lay.

I. 3.

"Cold is Cadwallo’s tongue,
  "That hush’d the stormy main:
"Brave Urien sleeps upon his craggy bed:
  "Mountains, ye mourn in vain
  "Modred, whose magic song
"Made huge Plinlimmon bow his cloud-top’d head.
  "On dreary Arvon’s shore (n) they lie,

(n) On dreary Arvon’s shore—
The shores of Caernarvonshire opposite to the isle of Anglesey.
"Smear'd with gore, and ghastly pale:
"Far, far aloof th' affrighted ravens sail;
"The famish'd Eagle screams, and passes by (o).
"Dear lost companions of my tuneful art,
"Dear as the light that visits these sad eyes (p),
"Dear as the ruddy drops that warm my heart,
"Ye died amidst your dying country's cries—
"No more I weep [4]. They do not sleep.
"On yonder cliffs, a grisly band,
"I see them sit, they linger yet,
"Avengers of their native land:

(o) The famish'd eagle screams, and passes by.
Camden and others observe, that eagles used annually to build their aerie among the rocks of Snowdon, which from thence (as some think) were named by the Welsh Craigiamery, or the crags of the eagles. At this day (I am told) the highest point of Snowdon is called the Eagle's nest. That bird is certainly no stranger to this island, as the Scots, and the people of Cumberland, Westmoreland, &c. can testify: it even has built its nest in the Peak of Derbyshire. (See Willoughby's Ornithol. published by Ray.)

(p) Dear as the light that visits these sad eyes.
As dear to me as are the ruddy drops
That visit my sad heart——

[4] Here (says an anonymous Critic) a vision of triumphant revenge is judiciously made to ensue, after the pathetic lamentation which precedes it. Breaks—double rhymes—an appropriated cadence—and an exalted ferocity of language forcibly picture to us the uncontrollable tumultuous workings of the prophet's stimulated bosom.
"With me in dreadful harmony they join,
"And weave with bloody hands the tissue of thy
"line (q).
"

II. 1.

"Weave the warp, and weave the woof [5],
"The winding-sheet of Edward’s race [6].
"Give ample room, and verge enough
"The characters of hell to trace.

(q) And weave with bloody hands the tissue of thy line.
See the Norwegian ode [The Fatal Sisters] hereafter.

[5] The Critic before-mentioned asks, "Can there be an image more just, apposite, and nobly imagined than this tremendous tragical winding-sheet?" In the rest of this stanza the wildness of thought, expression, and cadence are admirably adapted to the character and situation of the speaker, and of the bloody spectres his assistants. It is not indeed peculiar to it alone, but a beauty that runs throughout the whole composition, that the historical events are briefly sketched out by a few striking circumstances, in which the Poet’s office of rather exciting and directing, than satisfying the reader’s imagination, is per-fecfly observed. Such abrupt hints, resembling the several fragments of a vast ruin, suffer not the mind to be raised to the utmost pitch, by one image of horror, but that instantaneously a second and a third are presented to it, and the affection is still uniformly supported.

[6] Dr. Johnson, in his spleen against our Poet, descends to a mean witicism: "Gray (says he) has made weavers of slaughtered bards.
"They are then called upon to ‘weave the warp, and weave the woof,’
"perhaps with no great propriety; for it is by crossing the woof with
"the warp that men weave the web or piece." We know not where Johnson acquired his knowledge of the weaving trade; but if our information be correct, the Critic has made a mistake, for it is by crossing the warp with the woof that men weave, &c.
"Mark the year, and mark the night,
"When Severn shall re-echo with affright
"The shrieks of death, thro' Berkley's roof that ring,
"Shrieks of an agonizing King (r)!
"She-wolf of France (s), with unrelenting fangs,
"That tear'st the bowels of thy mangled Mate,
"From thee be born (t), who o'er thy country hangs
"The scourge of Heav'n. What Terrors round him wait!
"Amazement in his van, with Flight combin'd,
"And Sorrow's faded form, and Solitude behind.

II. 2.
"Mighty Victor, mighty Lord,
"Low on his funeral couch he lies (u)!

(r) Shrieks of an agonizing King!
Edward the Second, cruelly butchered in Berkley-castle.

(s) She-wolf of France——
Isabel of France, Edward the Second's adulterous Queen.

(t) From thee be born, &c.
Triumphs of Edward the Third in France.

(u) Low on his funeral couch he lies!
Death of that king, abandoned by his children, and even robbed in his last moments by his courtiers and his mistress
"No pitying heart, no eye, afford
A tear to grace his obsequies.
Is the sable Warrior fled (x)?
Thy son is gone. He rests among the Dead.
The Swarm, that in thy noon-tide beam were born?
Gone to salute the rising Morn.
Fair laughs the Morn (y), and soft the Zephyr blows [7],
While proudly riding o'er the azure realm
In gallant trim the gilded Vessel goes;
Youth on the prow, and Pleasure at the helm;
Regardless of the sweeping Whirlwind's sway,
That, hush'd in grim repose, expects his evening prey.

(x) Is the sable warrior fled?
Edward the Black Prince, dead some time before his father.

(y) Fair laughs the Morn, &c.
Magnificence of Richard the Second's reign. See Froissard and other contemporary writers.

[7] This and the five lines that follow convey, perhaps, the most beautiful piece of imagery in the whole Poem.
II. 3.

"Fill high the sparkling bowl (z),
"The rich repast prepare,
"Reft of a crown, he yet may share the feast:
"Close by the regal chair
"Fell Thirst and Famine scowl
"A baleful smile upon their baffled Guest.
"Heard ye the din of battle bray (a),
"Lance to lance, and horse to horse?
"Long years of havock urge their destin’d course,
"And thro’ the kindred squadrons mow their way [8].

(z) Fill high the sparkling bowl.

Richard the Second, as we are told by Archbishop Scroop and the confederate Lords in their manifesto, by Thomas of Walsingham, and all the older writers, was starved to death. The story of his assassination by Sir Piers of Exton, is of much later date.

(a) Heard ye the din of battle bray?

Ruinous civil wars of York and Lancaster.

[8] This Stanza (as an anonymous writer remarks) has exceeding merit. It breathes in a lesser compass, what the Ode breathes at large, the high spirit of Lyric Enthusiasm. The Transitions are sudden and impetuous; the Language full of fire and force; and the Imagery carried, without impropriety, to the most daring height. The manner of Richard’s death by Famine exhibits such beauties of Personification, as only the richest and most vivid Imagination could supply. From “Ye Tow’rs of Julius (b), London’s lasting “shame,
“With many a foul and midnight murder fed,
“Revere his Consort’s faith (c), his father’s “fame (d),
“And spare the meek Usurper’s holy head (e).
"Above, below, the rose of snow (f),
"Twin'd with her blushing foe, we spread:
"The bristled Boar (g) in infant-gore
"Wallows beneath the thorny shade.
"Now, Brothers, bending o'er th' accursed loom,
"Stamp we our vengeance deep, and ratify his "doom.

III. 1.
"Edward, lo! to sudden fate
"(Weave we the woof. The thread is spun.)
"Half of thy heart we consecrate (h).
"(The web is wove. The work is done.”)
"Stay, oh stay! nor thus forlorn
"Leave me unbless'd, unpitied, here to mourn:

(f) — the rose of snow, &c.
The white and red roses, devices of York and Lancaster.

(g) The bristled boar——
The silver boar was the badge of Richard the Third; whence he was usually known in his own time by the name of the Boar.

(h) Half of thy heart we consecrate.
Eleanor of Castile died a few years after the conquest of Wales. The heroic proof she gave of her affection for her lord is well known. The monuments of his regret and sorrow for the loss of her, are still to be seen at Northampton, Gaddington, Waltham, and other places.
"In yon bright track, that fires the western skies,
They melt, they vanish from my eyes.
But oh! what solemn scenes on Snowdon's height
Descending slow their glittering skirts unroll?
Visions of glory, spare my aching sight!
Ye unborn Ages, crowd not on my soul!
No more our long-lost Arthur we bewail (i).
All-hail, ye genuine Kings, Britannia's Issue, hail (k).

III. 2.

"Girt with many a Baron bold
Sublime their starry fronts they rear;
And gorgeous Dames, and Statesmen old,
In bearded majesty, appear.
In the midst a Form divine!
Her eye proclaims her of the Briton-Line;

(i) No more our long-lost Arthur we bewail.
It was the common belief of the Welsh nation, that King Arthur was still alive in Fairyland, and would return again to reign over Britain.

(k) All-hail, ye genuine Kings, Britannia's issue, hail!
Both Merlin and Taliesin had prophesied, that the Welsh should regain their sovereignty over this island; which seemed to be accomplished in the house of Tudor.
"Her lion-port, her awe-commanding face (l),
"Attemper'd sweet to virgin-grace.
"What strings symphonious tremble in the air,
"What strains of vocal transport round her play!
"Hear from the grave, great Talliessin (m), hear;
"They breathe a soul to animate thy clay.
"Bright Rapture calls, and soaring as she sings,
"Waves in the eye of Heav'n her many-colour'd
"wings.

III. 3.

"The verse adorn again
"Fierce War, and faithful Love (n),
"And Truth severe, by fairy Fiction drest.

(l) Her lion-port, her awe-commanding face.
Speed, relating an audience given by Queen Elizabeth, to Paul Dzialinski, ambassador of Poland, says, "And thus she, lion-like rising, daunted the malapert orator no less with her stately port and majestical deporture, than with the tartness of her princelie checkes."

(m) Hear from the grave, great Talliessin.
Talliessin, chief of the Bards, flourished in the sixth century. His works are still preserved, and his memory held in high veneration among his countrymen.

(n) Fierce War, and faithful Love.
Fierce wars and faithful loves shall moralize my song.
Spenser's Proem to the Fairy Queen.
"In buskin'd measures move (o)
"Pale Grief, and pleasing Pain,
"With Horror, Tyrant of the throbbing breast.
"A voice, as of the Cherub Choir (p),
"Gales from blooming Eden bear;
"And distant warblings lessen on my ear, (q)
"That lost in long futurity expire.
"Fond impious Man, think'st thou yon sanguine "cloud,
"Rais'd by thy breath, has quench'd the Orb of day?
"To-morrow he repairs the golden flood,
  "And warms the nations with redoubled ray.
"Enough for me: With joy I see
  "The different doom our Fates assign.
"Be thine Despair, and sceptred Care,
  "To triumph, and to die, are mine."

(o) In buskin'd measures move.
Shakespeare.

(p) A voice, as of the cherub-choir.
Milton.

(q) And distant warblings lessen on my ear.
The succession of Poets after Milton's time.
He spoke; and headlong from the mountain's height Deep in the roaring tide he plunged to endless night. [9]

[9] The original argument of this Ode, as its author had set it down on one of the pages of his common-place book, was as follows: "The "army of Edward I. as they march through a deep valley, are sudden"ly stopped by the appearance of a venerable figure seated on the "summit of an inaccessible rock, who, with a voice more than human,
"reproaches the king with all the misery and desolation which he had "brought on his country; foretells the misfortunes of the Norman race,
"and with prophetic spirit declares, that all his cruelty shall never ex-
"tinguish the noble ardour of poetic genius in this island; and that "men shall never be wanting to celebrate true virtue and valour in
"immortal strains, to expose vice and infamous pleasure, and boldly
"censure tyranny and oppression. His song ended, he precipitates
"himself from the mountain, and is swallowed up by the river that
"rolls at its foot."

"Fine (says Mr. Mason) as the conclusion of this Ode is at present, I think it would have been still finer, if he could have executed it ac-according to this plan; but, unhappily for his purpose, instances of English Poets were wanting. Spenser had that enchanting flow of verse which was peculiarly calculated to celebrate Virtue and Valour; but he chose to celebrate them, not literally, but in allegory. Shakespeare, who had talents for every thing, was undoubtedly capable of exposing Vice and infamous Pleasure; and the drama was a proper vehicle for his satire:
but we do not ever find that he professedly made this his object; nay, we know that, in one inimitable character, he has so contrived as to make vices of the worst kind, such as cowardice, drunkenness, dishonesty, and lewdness, not only laughable, but almost amiable; for with all these sins on his head, who can help liking Falstaff? Milton, of all our great Poets, was the only one who boldly censured Tyranny and Oppression: but he chose to deliver this censure, not in poetry, but in prose. Dryden was a mere court parasite to the most infamous of all courts. Pope, with all his laudable detestation of corruption and bribery, was a Tory; and Addison, though a Whig and a fine writer, was unluckily not enough of a Poet for his purpose. On these considerations Mr. Gray was necessitated to change his plan towards the conclusion: Hence we perceive, that in the last epode he praises Spenser only for his allegory, Shakespeare for his powers of moving the passions, and Milton for his epic excellence. I remember the Ode lay unfinished by him for a year or two on this very account; and I hardly believe that it would ever have had his last hand but for the circumstance of his hearing Parry play on the Welch harp at a concert at Cambridge, (see Letter xxv. sect. iv.) which he often declared inspired him with the conclusion.

"Mr. Smith, the Musical Composer and worthy pupil of Mr. Handel, had once an idea of setting this Ode, and of having it performed by way of serenata or oratorio. A common friend of his and Mr. Gray’s interested himself much in this design, and drew out a clear analysis of the Ode, that Mr. Smith might more perfectly understand the Poet’s meaning. He conversed also with Mr. Gray on the subject, who gave him an idea for the overture, and marked also some passages in the Ode in order to ascertain which should be recitative, which air, what kind of air, and how accompanied. The design was, however, not executed; and therefore I shall only (in order to give the reader a taste of Mr. Gray’s musical feelings) insert in this place what his sentiments were concerning the overture. "It should be so contrived as to be a proper introduction to the Ode; it might consist of two movements, the first descriptive of the horror and confusion of battle, the last a march grave and majestic, but expressing the exultation and insolent security of conquest. This movement should be composed entirely of wind instruments, except the kettle-drums heard at intervals. The da capo of it must be suddenly broke in upon, and put to silence by the clang of the harp in a tumultuous rapid movement, joined with the voice, all at once, and not ushered in by any symphony. The harmony may be strengthened by any other stringed instrument; but the harp should everywhere prevail, and form the continued running accompaniment, submitting itself to nothing but the voice."

"I cannot (says Mr. Mason) quit this and the preceding Ode, without saying a word or two concerning the obscurity which has been imputed to them, and the preference which, in consequence, has been given to his Elegy. It seems as if the persons, who hold this opinion, suppose that every species of Poetry ought to be equally clear and intelligible: than which position nothing can be more repugnant to the several specific natures of composition, and to the practice of ancient art. Not to take Pindar and his Odes for an example, (though what I am here defending were written professedly in imitation of him) I would ask, Are all the writings of Horace, his Epistles, Satires, and Odes, equally perspicuous? Amongst his Odes, separately considered, are there not remarkable differences of this very kind? Is the spirit and meaning of that which begins, "Descende caelo, & dic, age, tibia," Ode 4. lib. 3.
so readily comprehended as "Persicos odi, puer, apparatus," Ode 38.
1. 1. and is the latter a finer piece of lyrical composition on that account? Is "Integer vitae, scelerisq; purus," Ode 22. 1. 1. superior to "Pindarum quisquis studet æmulari," Ode 2. 1. 4. because it may be understood at the first reading, and the latter not without much study and reflection? Now between these Odes, thus compared, there is surely equal difference in point of perspicuity, as between the Progress of Poesy, and the Prospect of Eton; the Ode on the Spring, and the Bard. But, say these objectors, "The end of Poetry is, universally to "please. Obscurity, by taking off from our pleasure, destroys that "end." I will grant that, if the obscurity be great, constant, and unsurmountable, this is certainly true; but if it be only found in particular passages, proceeding from the nature of the subject and the very genius of the composition, it does not rob us of our pleasure, but super-adds a new one which arises from conquering a difficulty; and the pleasure which accrues from a difficult passage, when well understood, provided the passage itself be a fine one, is always more permanent than that which we discover at the first glance. The lyric Muse, like other fine Ladies, requires to be courted, and retains her admirers the longer for not having yielded too readily to their solicitations. This argument, ending as it does in a sort of simile, will, I am persuaded, not only have its force with the intelligent readers (the ΣΥΝΕΤΟΙ,) but also with the men of fashion; as to critics of a lower class, it may be sufcient to transcribe, for their improvement, an unfinished remark, or rather maxim, which I found amongst our Author's papers; and which he probably wrote on occasion of the common preference given to his Elegy. "The Gout de Comparaison (as Bruyere styles it) is the only
"taste of ordinary minds. They do not know the specific excellency
"either of an author or a composition: for instance, they do not know
"that Tibullus spoke the language of Nature and Love; that Horace
"saw the vanities and follies of mankind with the most penetrating eye,
"and touched them to the quick; that Virgil ennobled even the most "common images by the graces of a glowing, melodious, and well-
"adapted expression; but they do know that Virgil was a better poet
"than Horace; and that Horace's Epistles do not run so well as the "Elegies of Tibullus."
ODE FOR MUSIC.

[This Ode was performed in the Senate-House at Cambridge, July 1, 1769, at the Installation of his Grace Augustus-Henry Fitzroy, Duke of Grafton, Chancellor of the University. To give the reader an idea of its musical arrangement, we have printed it with the divisions adopted by the Composer, Dr. Randall, then Music Professor at Cambridge.]

AIR.

"HENCE, avaunt, ('tis holy ground)
"Comus, and his midnight-crew,
"And Ignorance with looks profound,
"And dreaming Sloth of pallid hue,
"Mad Sedition's cry profane,
"Servitude that hugs her chain,
"Nor in these consecrated bowers
"Let painted Flatt'ry hide her serpent-train in "flowers.

CHORUS.

"Nor Envy base, nor creeping Gain,
"Dare the Muse's walk to stain,
ODE FOR MUSIC.

"While bright-eyed Science watches round:
"Hence, away, 'tis holy ground!"

RECITATIVE.

From yonder realms of empyrean day
Bursts on my ear th' indignant lay:
There sit the sainted Sage, the Bard divine,
The Few, whom Genius gave to shine
Thro' every unborn age, and undiscover'd clime.
Rapt in celestial transport they;
Yet hither oft a glance from high
They send of tender sympathy
To bless the place, where on their opening soul
First the genuine ardour stole.
'Twas Milton struck the deep-ton'd shell,
And, as the choral warblings round him swell,
Meek Newton's self bends from his state sublime,
And nods his hoary head, and listens to the rhyme.

AIR.

"Ye brown o'er-arching Groves,
"That Contemplation loves,

E
"Where willowy Camus lingers with delight!
Oft at the blush of dawn
I trod your level lawn,
Oft woo'd the gleam of Cynthia silver-bright
In cloisters dim, far from the haunts of Folly,
With Freedom by my side, and soft-ey'd Melancholy."

RECITATIVE.

But hark! the portals sound, and pacing forth
With solemn steps and slow,
High Potentates, and Dames of royal birth,
And mitred fathers in long order go:
Great Edward, with the lilies on his brow (r)
From haughty Gallia torn,
And sad Chatillon, on her bridal morn (s)

(r) Great Edward with the lilies on his brow.

Edward the Third, who added the fleur de lys of France to the arms of England. He founded Trinity College.

(s) And sad Chatillon on her bridal morn.

Mary de Valentia, Countess of Pembroke, daughter of Guy de Chatillon, Comte de St. Paul in France: of whom tradition says, that her husband Audemar de Valentia, Earl of Pembroke, was slain at a tournament on the day of his nuptials. She was the foundress of Pembroke College or Hall, under the name of Aula Mariae de Valentia.
That wept her bleeding Love, and princely Clare (t)
And Anjou's Heroine, and the paler Rose (u),
The rival of her crown and of her woes,
    And either Henry there (x),
The murder'd Saint, and the majestic Lord,
    That broke the bonds of Rome.
(Their tears, their little triumphs o'er,
Their human passions now no more,
Save Charity, that glows beyond the tomb.)

[ACCOMPANIED.] All that on Granta's fruitful plain
Rich streams of regal bounty pour'd,

(t) —— and princely Clare.

Elizabeth de Burg, Countess of Clare, was wife of John de Burg, son and heir of the Earl of Ulster, and daughter of Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester, by Joan of Acres, daughter of Edward the First. Hence the Poet gives her the epithet of princely. She founded Clare-Hall.

(u) And Anjou's Heroine, and the paler Rose.

Margaret of Anjou, wife of Henry the Sixth, foundress of Queen's College. The Poet has celebrated her conjugal fidelity in The Bard, Epode 2d, Line 13th.

Elizabeth Widville, wife of Edward the Fourth, hence called the paler rose, as being of the house of York. She added to the foundation of Margaret of Anjou.

(x) And either Henry there.

Henry the Sixth and Eighth. The former the founder of King's, the latter the greatest benefactor to Trinity College.

E 2
And bad these awful fanes and turrets rise,
To hail their Fitzroy's festal morning come;
   And thus they speak in soft accord
The liquid language of the skies:

QUARTETTO.

"What is Grandeur, what is Power?
"Heavier toil, superior pain.
"What the bright reward we gain?
"The grateful memory of the Good.
"Sweet is the breath of vernal shower,
"The bee's collected treasures sweet,
"Sweet music's melting fall, but sweeter yet
"The still small voice of Gratitude."

RECITATIVE.

Foremost and leaning from her golden cloud
   The venerable Marg'ret see (y)!
"Welcome, my noble Son, (she cries aloud)
"To this, thy kindred train, and me:

(y) The venerable Marg'ret see.
Countess of Richmond and Derby: the mother of Henry the Seventh, foundress of St. John's and Christ's Colleges.
"Pleas'd in thy lineaments we trace
A Tudor's fire, a Beaufort's grace (z).

AIR.
"Thy liberal heart, thy judging eye,
"The flower unheeded shall descry,
"And bid it round Heav'n's altar shed
"The fragrance of its blushing head:
"Shall raise from earth the latent gem
"To glitter on the diadem.

RECITATIVE.
"Lo, Granta waits to lead her blooming band,
"Not obvious, not obtrusive, She
"No vulgar praise, no venal incense flings;
"Nor dares with courtly tongue refin'd
"Profane thy inborn royalty of mind:
"She reveres herself and thee.
"With modest pride to grace thy youthful brow,

(z) A Tudor's fire, a Beaufort's grace.

The Countess was a Beaufort, and married to a Tudor: hence the application of this line to the Duke of Grafton, who claims descent from both these families.
"The laureate wreath, that Cecil wore (a), she brings,
"And to thy just, thy gentle hand,
"Submits the Fasces of her sway,
"While Spirits blest above and Men below
"Join with glad voice the loud symphonious lay.

GRAND CHORUS.
"Thro' the wild waves as they roar
"With watchful eye and dauntless mien
"Thy steady course of honour keep,
"Nor fear the rocks, nor seek the shore:
"The Star of Brunswick smiles serene,
"And gilds the horrors of the deep."

(a) The laureate wreath, that Cecil wore.
Lord Treasurer Burleigh was Chancellor of the University, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.
THE FATAL SISTERS.

AN ODE.

FROM THE NORSE-TONGUE [1].

[To be found in the Orcades of Thormodus Torfæus; Hafniae, 1697; Folio: and also in Bartholinus.

Vitt er orpit fyrr valfally, &c.

In the Eleventh Century Sigurd, Earl of the Orkney-Islands, went with a fleet of ships and a considerable body of troops into Ireland, to the assistance of Sictryg with the silken beard, who was then making war on his father-in-law Brian, King of Dublin: the Earl and all his forces were cut to pieces, and Sictryg was in danger of a total defeat; but the enemy had a greater loss by the death of Brian, their King, who fell in the action. On Christmas-day, (the day of the battle) a Native of Caithness in Scotland, saw at a distance a number of persons on horseback riding full speed towards a hill, and seeming to enter into it. Curiosity led him to follow them, till looking through an opening in the rocks he saw twelve gigantic figures resembling women: they were all employed about a loom; and as they wove, they sang the following dreadful Song; which when they had finished, they tore the web into twelve pieces, and (each taking her portion) galloped Six to the North and as many to the South. These were the Valkyriur, female Divinities, Servants of Odin (or Woden) in the Gothic Mythology. Their name signifies Chusers of the slain. They were mounted on swift horses, with drawn swords in their hands; and in the throng of battle selected such as were destined to slaughter, and conducted them to Valkalla, the hall of Odin, or paradise of the Brave; where they attended the banquet, and served the departed Heroes with horns of mead and ale.]

[1] Even Dr. Johnson allows that Mr. Gray's "translations of Northern and Welsh Poetry deserve praise. The imagery (says he) is preserved, perhaps often improved."
NOW the Storm begins to lower,
   (Haste, the loom of Hell prepare,)
Iron-sleet of arrowy shower (b)
   Hurtles in the darken'd air (c).

Glitt'ring lances are the loom,
   Where the dusky warp we strain,
Weaving many a Soldier's doom,
   Orkney's woe, and Randver's bane.

See the grisly texture grow!
   ('Tis of human entrails made)
And the weights, that play below,
   Each a gasping Warrior's head.

(b) Iron sleet of arrowy shower.
    How quick they wheel'd, and, flying, behind them shot
    Sharp sleet of arrowy shower.—
    Milton's Paradise Regained.

(c) Hurtles in the darken'd air.
    The noise of battle hurtled in the air.
    Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Shafts for shuttles, dipt in gore,
   Shoot the trembling cords along.
Sword, that once a Monarch bore,
   Keep the tissue close and strong.

Mista, black terrific Maid,
   Sangrida, and Hilda, see!
Join the wayward work to aid:
   'Tis the woof of victory.

Ere the ruddy sun be set,
   Pikes must shiver, javelins sing,
Blade with clatt'ring buckler meet,
   Hauberk crash, and helmet ring.

(Weave the crimson web of war)
   Let us go, and let us fly,
Where our Friends the conflict share,
   Where they triumph, where they die.

As the paths of Fate we tread,
   Wading thro' th' ensanguin'd field,
Gondula, and Geira, spread
O'er the youthful King your shield.

We the reins to slaughter give,
Ours to kill, and ours to spare:
Spite of danger he shall live.
(Weave the crimson web of war.)

They, whom once the desert-beach
Pent within its bleak domain,
Soon their ample sway shall stretch
O'er the plenty of the plain.

Low the dauntless Earl is laid,
Gor'd with many a gaping wound:
Fate demands a nobler head;
Soon a King shall bite the ground.

Long his loss shall Eirin weep (d),
Ne'er again his likeness see;

(d) Long his loss shall Eirin weep.
Ireland.
Long her strains in sorrow steep:
    Strains of Immortality!

Horror covers all the heath,
    Clouds of carnage blot the sun.
Sisters, weave the web of death.
    Sisters, cease: The work is done.

Hail the task, and hail the hands!
    Songs of joy and triumph sing!
Joy to the victorious bands;
    Triumph to the younger King.

Mortal, thou that hear'st the tale,
    Learn the tenour of our song.
Scotland, thro' each winding vale
    Far and wide the notes prolong.

Sisters, hence with spurs of speed:
    Each her thundering faulchion wield;
Each bestride her sable steed.
    Hurry, hurry to the field.
THE DESCENT OF ODIN.

AN ODE.

FROM THE NORSE-TONGUE.

[The original is to be found in Bartholinus, de causis contemnendæ mortis; Hafniae, 1689, Quarto.

Upreis Odinn allda gautr, &c.]

UPROSE the King of Men with speed,
And saddled strait his coal-black steed:
Down the yawning steep he rode,
That leads to Hela’s drear abode (e).
Him the Dog of Darkness spied [1];
His shaggy throat he open’d wide,
While from his jaws, with carnage fill’d,
Foam and human gore distill’d:

(e) That leads to Hela’s drear abode.

Niflheimr, the hell of the Gothic nations, consisted of nine worlds, to which were devoted all such as died of sickness, old age, or by any other means than in battle. Over it presided Hela, the Goddess of Death.

[1] The Edda gives this dog the name of Managarmar; he fed upon the lives of those that were to die.
Hoarse he bays * with hideous din,
Eyes that glow, and fangs that grin;
And long pursues, with fruitless yell,
The Father of the powerful spell.
Onward still his way he takes,
(The groaning earth beneath him shakes,)
Till full before his fearless eyes
The portals nine of Hell arise.

Right against the eastern gate,
By the moss-grown pile he sate;
Where long of yore to sleep was laid
The dust of the prophetic Maid.
Facing to the northern clime,
Thrice he trac’d the Runic rhyme;
Thrice pronounc’d, in accents dread,
The thrilling verse that wakes the Dead;
Till from out the hollow ground
Slowly breath’d a sullen sound.

* Several Editions have it brays. It is not, however, the nature of the dog, but of the ass, to bray. To bay is, according to Johnson, to bark, as a dog at a thief.
PROPHETESS.

What call unknown, what charms, presume
To break the quiet of the tomb?
Who thus afflicts my troubled sprite,
And drags me from the realms of night?
Long on these mould’ring bones have beat
The winter’s snow, the summer’s heat,
The drenching dews, and driving rain!
Let me, let me sleep again.
Who is he, with voice unblest,
That calls me from the bed of rest?

ODIN.

A Traveller, to thee unknown,
Is he that calls, a Warrior’s Son.
Thou the deeds of light shalt know;
Tell me what is done below [2],

[2] Odin, we find both from this Ode and the Edda, was solicitous about the fate of his son Balder, who had dreamed that he was soon to die. The Edda mentions the manner of his death when killed by Odin’s other son Hoder; and also that Hoder was himself slain afterwards by Vali the son of Odin and Rinda, consonant with this prophecy.
For whom yon glitt'ring board is spread,
Drest for whom yon golden bed?

PROPHETESS.

Mantling in the goblet see
The pure bev'rage of the bee;
O'er it hangs the shield of gold;
'Tis the drink of Balder bold:
Balder's head to death is giv'n.
Pain can reach the Sons of Heav'n!
Unwilling I my lips unclose:
Leave me, leave me to repose.

ODIN.

Once again my call obey[3].
Prophetess, arise, and say,

[3] Women were looked upon by the Gothic nations as having a peculiar insight into futurity; and some there were that made profession of magic'arts and divination. These travelled round the country, and were received in every house with great respect and honour. Such a woman bore the name of Volva Seidkona or Spakona. The dress of Thorbiorga, one of these prophetesses, is described at large in Eirick's Rauda Sogu, (apud Bartholin. lib. i. cap. iv. p. 688.) "She had on a " blue vest spangled all over with stones, a necklace of glass beads, and " a cap made of the skin of a black lamb lined with white cat-skin. " She leaned on a staff adorned with brass, with a round head set with What dangers Odin's Child await,
Who the Author of his fate?

PROPHETESS.
In Hoder's hand the Hero's doom;
His brother sends him to the tomb.
Now my weary lips I close:
Leave me, leave me to repose.

ODIN.
Prophetess, my spell obey,
Once again arise, and say,
Who th' Avenger of his guilt,
By whom shall Hoder's blood be spilt?

PROPHETESS.
In the caverns of the west,
By Odin's fierce embrace comprest,

"stones; and was girt with an Hunlandish belt, at which hung her pouch full of magical instruments. Her buskins were of rough calf-skin, bound on with thongs studded with knobs of brass, and her gloves of white cat-skin, the fur turned inwards," &c. They were also called Fiolkyngi, or Fiol-kunnug; i. e. Multi-scia; and Visinda-kona; i. e. Oraculorum Mulier, Nornir; i. e. Parcae."
A wond'rous Boy shall Rinda bear,
Who ne'er shall comb his raven-hair,
Nor wash his visage in the stream,
Nor see the sun's departing beam,
Till he on Hoder's corse shall smile
Flaming on the fun'ral pile.
Now my weary lips I close:
Leave me, leave me to repose.

ODIN.

Yet awhile my call obey;
Prophetess, awake, and say,
What Virgins these, in speechless woe[4],
That bend to earth their solemn brow,
That their flaxen tresses tear,
And snowy veils, that float in air.
Tell me whence their sorrows rise:
Then I leave thee to repose.

[4] These were probably the Nornir or Parcae, before-mentioned; their names were Urda, Verandi, and Skulda; and they were the dispensers of good destinies. As their names signify Time past, present, and future, it is probable they were always invisible to mortals: therefore when Odin asks this question on seeing them, he betrays himself to be a God; which elucidates the next speech of the Prophetess.
THE DESCENT OF ODIN.

PROPHETESS.

Ha! no Traveller art thou,
King of Men, I know thee now;
Mightiest of a mighty line——

ODIN.

No boding Maid of skill divine
Art thou, nor Prophetess of good;
But mother of the giant-brood [5]!

PROPHETESS.

Hie thee hence, and boast at home,
That never shall Enquirer come
To break my iron-sleep again;
Till Lok has burst his tenfold chain (f);

[5] In the Latin, "Mater trium Gigantum." He means, therefore, probably Angerbode, who, from her name, seems to be "no Prophetess of good," and who bore to Loke, as the Edda says, three children; the Wolf Fenris, the great Serpent Midgard, and Hela, all of them called Giants in that wild but curious system of mythology.

(f) Till Lok has burst his tenfold chain.

Lok is the Evil Being, who continues in chains till the Twilight of the Gods approaches; when he shall break his bonds; the human race, the stars, and sun, shall disappear; the earth sink in the seas, and fire consume the skies: even Odin himself and his kindred deities shall perish. For a farther explanation of this mythology, see "Introduction a l'His-
Never, till substantial Night
Has re-assum'd her ancient right;
Till wrap'd in flames, in ruin hurl'd,
Sinks the fabric of the world.

"toire de Dansemar, par Mons. Mallet," 1755, Quarto; or rather a translation of it published in 1770, and intitled, "Northern Antiquities," in which some mistakes in the original are judiciously corrected.

[The EDITOR thinks he shall render not an unacceptable service to the Reader of taste, by inserting here a literal version of the original Poem, of which the foregoing is an imitation. The Reader may find a pleasure in comparing the rugged materials of the Skald with the polished stanzas and arrangements of the poet. It will be perceived, that either from choice, or the want of a complete Copy, Mr. Gray has passed over the first five stanzas.]

I.
Deep to consult,
The gods all met;
To talk aloud,
The goddesses;
Debate the holy synod shook
On Balder's late
POMentious dreams.

If in the vision dim
A secret terror lurked.

III.
The oracles replied
That Viler's * friend elect,
The darling of all beings,
Was summoned to his fate:
Anguish seized
Freya † and Suafne,
And the celestial host;
Firm they resolved to send

IV.
An embassy around
To nature's general race,

* Viler the son of Sifia, noted among the gods for beauty, archery, and skill in skaiting.
† Or Frigga, the wife of Odin.
Their unison to ask
For Balder’s safety:
Unanimous they took
An universal oath
As Freya’s self
Exacted it of each.

V.
The father of the slain
Suspected still a flaw—
The fatal absence
Of the destinies:
The gods he called anew,
And their decision asked;
But discord rent
The loud assembly.

VI.
Up rose Odin*
The sire of men,
O’er Sleipner strait
His saddle threw:
The road he took
Of Niflheim dark,
And met the whelp
Of murky Hell.

VII.
Gore him distained
A thwart the breast,
Wide flash’d his jaw
Rent to devour:
Aloud he bark’d,
Amain he yawned,
And long howled round
The sire of spells.

VIII.
On rode Odin
His thunder-shaken path,
On to the roof
Of Hela high:
What spot, before
The orient-door,
He knew full well
Volva was laid.

IX.
Turned to the north,
The sire of exorcism
Began to tune
The song of death:
The eddying wand,
The mighty spell,
Unlocked to moans
The hell-bound voice.

X. VOLVA.
What wight is he,
To me unknown,
That wakes my sense
To trouble new?
Snowed o’er with snows
By showers beat,
All drenched with dews
Dead lay I long.

* If, in the progress of the ode, the motive of Odin’s descent, the dream of Balder, had been again hinted at, the abrupt simplicity with which this stanza sets out might account for Mr. Gray’s omitting the five preceding ones.
XI. ODIN.

Vegtamr * is my name,
The son of Valtams, I;
Tell thou of Hell,
I can of light:
For whom is spread
Yon radiant board?
That couch for whom
Flooded with gold?

XIV. VOLVA.

That towering thought
Swells the proud breast
Of Haudr homicide!
Fell Haudr nips
The blooming day
Of Odin's son!
Unwilling have I spoke,
Dismiss me to my rest!

XII. VOLVA.

For Ballder brews
Yon mead-crown'd cup
Its pearly wave,
His the incumbent shield;
The loud lament
Of Asa's sons.
Unwilling have I spoke!
Dismiss me to my rest.

XV. ODIN.

Volva say on:
What man shall glut
Revenge for Haudr's rage?
And on the flaming pile
Lift Ballder's foe?

XIII. ODIN.

Volva say on,—
For I shall ask
Till I know all;
This one I want to learn:
Beneath whose arm
Shall Ballder fall?
What man shall nip
His bloom of life?

XVI. VOLVA.

Far in her western halls‡
Rinda to Odin bears
A son—who shall not greet
His second night, or clear
His hand of blood, or comb
His locks, e'er on the pile
He hurls slain Ballder's foe!
Unwilling have I spoke,
Dismiss me to my rest.

* Vegtamr, Valtams, names of toil and war.

‡ Mr. Gray follows the common explication of this perplexed passage, and makes Haudr or Hother, the brother of Ballder. Saxo, whose information cannot have been much inferior to Snorro's, makes him the son of Hodbrodd, Ballder's rival for Nanna, and the declared enemy of the Asi. Lib. iii. Hist. Dan. i.
XVII. ODIN.
Volva, say on!
What Virgins those*
That flow in tears,
And heavenward throw
Their snowy veils!
This answer yet
E'er thou repose.

XVIII. VOLVA.
Vegetamr, thou art not
As I weened!
Odin, thou art
The sire of men!

XIX. ODIN.
Volva, thou art not!
Thou, wizard none!
The dam thou art
Of giant-cubs!

XX. VOLVA.
Ride home Odin,
And triumph now!
And thus fare he
Who breaks my sleep,
Till Lock redeemed
His fetters bursts!
And twilight blasts
The eve of gods!

* The oracles had told that Balder might be redeemed from Hela, by what they knew could not happen, the unanimous intercession of the sex. Odin, after having received answers to every question that coincided with the decrees of fate, makes use of an artifice to come at the knowledge of Balder's final destiny, by inventing a vision of female lamentation, and betrays himself by this trick to the prophetess, who saw only realities.
THE TRIUMPHS OF OWEN.

A FRAGMENT.

FROM THE WELCH.

[From Mr. Evans's specimens of the Welch Poetry*; London, 1764, Quarto. Owen succeeded his father Griffin in the principality of North Wales, A. D. 1120. This battle was fought near forty years afterwards.]

OWEN's praise demands my song,
Owen swift, and Owen strong;
Fairest flower of Roderic's stem,
Gwyneth's shield (g), and Britain's gem.

(g) Gwyneth. North Wales.

* The following is the prose version of Mr. Evans, p. 25.

Panegyric upon Owain Gwynedd, Prince of North Wales, by Gwalchmai, the son of Melir, in the year 1157.

1. I will extol the generous Hero, descended from the race of Roderic, the bulwark of his country; a prince eminent for his good qualities, the glory of Britain, Owen the brave and expert in arms, a Prince that neither hoardeth nor coveteth riches.

2. Three fleets arrived, vessels of the main; three powerful fleets of the first rate, furiously to attack him on the sudden: one from Jwerddon (Ireland,) the other full of well-armed Lochlinians (Danes
He nor heaps his brooded stores,
Nor on all profusely pours;
Lord of every regal art,
Liberal hand, and open heart.

Big with hosts of mighty name,
Squadrons three against him came;
This the force of Eirin hiding,
Side by side as proudly riding,
On her shadow long and gay
Lochlin (h) plows the wat'ry way;

(h) Lochlin. Denmark.

and Normans) making a grand appearance on the floods, the third from the transmarine Normans, which was attended with an immense, though successless toil.

3. The Dragon of Mona's sons was so brave in action, that there was a great tumult on their furious attack; and before the Prince himself there was vast confusion, havoc, conflict, honourable death, bloody battle, horrible consternation, and upon Tal Malvre a thousand banners; there was an outrageous carnage, and the rage of spears and hasty signs of violent indignation. Blood raised the tide of the Menai, and the crimson of human gore stained the brine. There were glittering cuirasses, and the agony of gashing wounds, and the mangled warriors prostrate before the chief, distinguished by his crimson lance. Lloegria was put into confusion; the contest and confusion was great; and the glory of our Prince's wide-wasting sword shall be celebrated in an hundred languages to give him his merited praise.
There the Norman sails afar
Catch the winds and join the war:
Black and huge along they sweep,
Burdens of the angry deep.

Dauntless on his native sands
The Dragon-son of Mona stands (i);
In glitt'ring arms and glory drest,
High he rears his ruby crest.
There the thund'ring strokes begin,
There the press, and there the din;
TalyMALfa's rocky shore
Echoing to the battle's roar.

* Check'd by the torrent-tide of blood,
Backward Menai rolls his flood;
While, heap'd his master's feet around,
Prostrate Warriors gnaw the ground.

(i) The Dragon-son of Mona stands.
The red Dragon is the device of Cadwallader, which all his descenddants bore on their banners.

* This and the three following lines were not in the original Editions, but were added by Mr. Mason from the Author's MS.
Where his glowing eye-balls turn,
Thousand banners round him burn:
Where he points his purple spear,
Hasty, hasty Rout is there;
Marking with indignant eye
Fear to stop, and shame to fly.
There Confusion, Terror's child,
Conflict fierce, and Ruin wild,
Agony, that pants for breath,
Despair and honourable Death.

* * * * * * *
THE DEATH OF HOEL.

AN ODE.

FROM THE WELCH.

[This Ode is extracted from the Gododin. See Mr. Evans's Specimens, p. 71 and 73.]

HAD I but the torrent's might,
With headlong rage and wild affright
Upon Deïra's squadrons hurl'd
To rush, and sweep them from the world!

Too, too secure in youthful pride,
By them, my friend, my Hoel, died,
Great Cian's son: of Madoc old
He ask'd no heaps of hoarded gold;
Alone in Nature's wealth array'd,
He ask'd and had the lovely Maid.

To Cattraeth's vale in glitt'ring row
Twice two hundred Warriors go:
Every Warrior's manly neck
Chains of regal honour deck,
Wreath'd in many a golden link:
From the golden cup they drink
Nectar, that the bees produce,
Or the grape's ecstatic juice.
Flush'd with mirth and hope they burn:
But none from Cattraeth's vale return,
Save Aëron brave, and Conan strong,
(Bursting thro' the bloody throng)
And I, the meanest of them all,
That live to weep and sing their fall.
SONNET

ON

THE DEATH OF MR. RICHARD WEST *.

In vain to me the smiling Mornings shine,
And redd'ning Phœbus lifts his golden fire:
The birds in vain their amorous descant join;
Or cheerful fields resume their green attire:

These ears, alas! for other notes repine,
A different object do these eyes require:
My lonely anguish melts no heart but mine;
And in my breast the imperfect joys expire.

Yet Morning smiles the busy race to cheer,
And new-born pleasure brings to happier men:
The fields to all their wonted tribute bear:
To warm their little loves the birds complain:
I fruitless mourn to him that cannot hear,
And weep the more because I weep in vain.

* Son of Lord Chancellor West, of Ireland.
EPITAPH

ON MRS. CLARKE.

[This Lady, the Wife of Dr. Clarke, Physician at Epsom, died April 27, 1737; and is buried in the Church of Beckenham, Kent.]

Lo! where this silent marble weeps,
A Friend, a Wife, a Mother sleeps:
A Heart, within whose sacred cell
The peaceful Virtues lov'd to dwell.
Affection warm, and Faith sincere,
And soft Humanity were there.
In agony, in death resign'd,
She felt the Wound she left behind.
Her infant Image here below,
Sits smiling on a Father's woe:
Whom what awaits, while yet he strays
Along the lonely vale of days?
A Pang, to secret sorrow dear;
A Sigh; an unavailing Tear;
Till Time shall ev’ry grief remove,
With Life, with Memory, and with Love.
EPITAPH

ON SIR WILLIAM WILLIAMS.*

[This Epitaph was written at the request of Mr. Frederick Montagu, who intended to have inscribed it on a Monument at Bellisle, at the siege of which this accomplished youth was killed, 1761; but from some difficulty attending the erection of it, this design was not executed.]

HERE, foremost in the dangerous paths of fame,
Young Williams fought for England’s fair renown;
His mind each Muse, each Grace adorn’d his frame,
Nor Envy dar’d to view him with a frown.

At Aix, his voluntary sword he drew [1],
There first in blood his infant honour seal’d;
From fortune, pleasure, science, love he flew,
And scorn’d repose when Britain took the field.

* Sir William Peere Williams, bart. a Captain in Burgoyne’s dragoons.

[1] Sir William Williams, in the Expedition to Aix, was on board the Magnanime with Lord Howe; and was deputed to receive the capitulation.
With eyes of flame, and cool undaunted breast,
   Victor he stood on Belleisle's rocky steeps—
Ah, gallant youth! this marble tells the rest,
   Where melancholy Friendship bends and weeps.
ELEGY

WRITTEN IN

A COUNTRY CHURCH-YARD.

[Originally called by Mr. Gray, "Stanzas written in a Country Church-Yard.

The following Analysis of this Poem, which has been often said to be without a Plan, was sketched by the late Mr. Scott, of Amwell:

"The Poet very graphically describes the process of a calm evening, in which he introduces himself wandering near a Country Church-yard. From the sight of the place, he takes occasion, by a few natural and simple, but important circumstances, to characterize the life of a peasant; and observes, that it need not be disdained by ambition or grandeur, whose most distinguished superiorities must all terminate in the grave. He then proceeds to intimate, that it was not from any natural inequality of abilities, but from want of acquired advantages, as riches, knowledge, &c. that the humble race, whose place of interment he was surveying, did not rank with the most celebrated of their cotemporaries. The same impediments, however, which obstructed their course to greatness, he thinks also precluded their progress in vice; and, consequently, that what was lost in one respect was gained in the other. From this reflection he not unnaturally proceeds to remark on that universality of regard to the deceased, which produces, even for these humble villagers a commemoration of their past existence. Then turning his attention to himself, he indulges the idea of his being commemorated in the same manner, and introduces an Epitaph which he supposes to be employed on the occasion."

See Scott's Critical Essays, 8vo. 1785.]
THE Curfew tolls the knell of parting day (k),
The lowing herd wind slowly o'er the lea,
The ploughman homeward plods his weary way,
And leaves the world to darkness and to me.

Now fades the glimmering landscape on the sight,
And all the air a solemn stillness holds,
Save where the beetle wheels his droning flight,
And drowsy tinklings lull the distant folds.

Save that from yonder ivy-mantled tower,
The moping owl does to the moon complain
Of such as, wand'ring near her secret bower,
Molest her ancient solitary reign.

Beneath those rugged elms, that yew-tree's shade,
Where heaves the turf in many a mould'ring heap,
Each in his narrow cell for ever laid,
The rude Forefathers of the hamlet sleep.

(k) The Curfew tolls the knell of parting day.

squilla di lontano
Che paia 'l giorno pianger, che si muore.
Dante, Purgat. l. 8.

G 2
The breezy call of incense-breathing Morn,
   The swallow twitt'ring from the straw-built shed,
The cock's shrill clarion, or the echoing horn,
   No more shall rouse them from their lowly bed.

For them no more the blazing hearth shall burn,
   Or busy housewife ply her evening-care:
No children run to lisp their sire's return,
   Or climb his knees the envied kiss to share.

Oft did the harvest to their sickle yield,
   Their furrow oft the stubborn glebe has broke:
How jocund did they drive their team asfield!
   How bow'd the woods beneath their sturdy stroke!

Let not Ambition mock their useful toil,
   Their homely joys, and destiny obscure;
Nor Grandeur hear with a disdainful smile
   The short and simple annals of the poor.
The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
   And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike th' inevitable hour.
   The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Nor you, ye Proud, impute to these the fault,
   If Memory o'er their tomb no trophies raise,
Where thro' the long-drawn aisle and fretted vault
   The pealing anthem swells the note of praise.

Can storied urn or animated bust,
   Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
Can Honour's voice provoke the silent dust,
   Or Flatt'ry sooth the dull cold ear of Death?

Perhaps in this neglected spot is laid
   Some heart once pregnant with celestial fire;
Hands, that the rod of empire might have sway'd,
   Or wak'd to ecstasy the living lyre.
But Knowledge to their eyes her ample page
Rich with the spoils of Time did ne'er unroll;
Chill Penury repress'd their noble rage,
And froze the genial current of the soul.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene
The dark unfathom'd caves of Ocean bear:
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

Some village Hampden, that, with dauntless breast,
The little Tyrant of his fields withstood,
Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest,
Some Cromwell guiltless of his country's blood [1].

[1] Mr. Edwards (Author of the Canons of Criticism) who, though an old bachelor, like Mr. Gray, was more attentive to the fair sex than our Pindaric Poet, endeavoured to supply what he thought a defect in this admired Poem, by introducing after this the two following stanzas, the first of which is certainly the happiest effort of the two:

Some lovely fair, whose unaffected charms
Shone with attraction to herself unknown;
Whose beauty might have blest a monarch's arms,
And virtue cast a lustre on the throne:
Th' applause of list'ning senates to command,
The threats of pain and ruin to despise,
To scatter plenty o'er a smiling land,
And read their hist'ry in a nation's eyes,

Their lot forbade: nor circumscrib'd alone
Their growing virtues, but their crimes confin'd;
Forbade to wade through slaughter to a throne,
And shut the gates of mercy on mankind,

The struggling pangs of conscious Truth to hide,
To quench the blushes of ingenuous Shame,
Or heap the shrine of Luxury and Pride
With incense kindled at the Muse's flame. [2]

That humble beauty warm'd an honest heart,
And cheer'd the labours of a faithful spouse;
That virtue form'd, for every decent part,
The healthy offspring that adorn'd their house.

[2] After this verse, in Mr. Gray's first MS. of the Poem, were the four following:—

The thoughtless world to Majesty may bow,
Exalt the brave, and idolize success;
But more to innocence their safety owe,
Than Pow'r or Genius e'er conspir'd to bless.

And
Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife,
Their sober wishes never learn'd to stray;
Along the cool sequester'd vale of life
They kept the noiseless tenour of their way.

Yet ev'n these bones from insult to protect
Some frail memorial still erected nigh,
With uncouth rhymes and shapeless sculpture deck'd,
Implores the passing tribute of a sigh.

And thou who, mindful of th' unhonour'd Dead,
Dost in these notes their artless tale relate,
By night and lonely contemplation led
To wander in the gloomy walks of fate:

Hark! how the sacred calm, that breathes around,
Bids every fierce tumultuous passion cease;
In still small accents whispering from the ground,
A grateful earnest of eternal peace.

No more, with reason and thyself at strife,
Give anxious cares and endless wishes room;
But through the cool sequester'd vale of life
Pursue the silent tenor of thy doom.

And here the Poem was originally intended to conclude, before the happy idea of the hoary-headed Swain, &c. suggested itself to him. Mr. Mason thinks the third of these rejected stanzas equal to any in the whole Elegy.
Their name, their years, spelt by th’ unletter’d Muse,
The place of fame and elegy supply:
And many a holy text around she strews,
That teach the rustic Moralist to die.

For who, to dumb Forgetfulness a prey,
This pleasing anxious being e’er resign’d,
Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day,
Nor cast one longing ling’ring look behind?

On some fond breast the parting soul relies,
Some pious drops the closing eye requires;
Ev’n from the tomb the voice of Nature cries,

[3] Variation:—Awake and faithful to her wonted fires.
Thus (says Mr. Mason) it stood in the first and some following editions, and I think rather better; for the authority of Petrarch does not destroy the appearance of quaintness in the other: the thought, however, is rather obscurely expressed in both readings. He means to say, in plain prose, that we wish to be remembered by our friends after our death, in the same manner as when alive we wished to be remembered by them in our absence.

(l) Ev’n in our ashes live their wonted fires.
Ch’i veggio nel pensier, dolce mio fuoco,
Fredda una lingua, & due agli occhi chiusi
Rimaner doppo noi pien di faville.

Petrarch, Son. 169.
For thee, who mindful of th' unhonour'd Dead
Dost in these lines their artless tale relate;
If chance, by lonely Contemplation led,
Some kindred Spirit shall enquire thy fate,

Haply some hoary-headed Swain may say,
"Oft have we seen him at the peep of dawn
Brushing with hasty steps the dews away,
To meet the sun upon the upland lawn[4].

"There at the foot of yonder nodding beech,
"That wreathes its old fantastic roots so high,
"His listless length at noontide would he stretch,
"And pore upon the brook that babbles by.

After which, in his first manuscript, followed this stanza:

Him have we seen the greenwood side along,
While o'er the heath we hied, our labour done,
Oft as the woodlark pip'd her farewell song,
With wistful eyes pursue the setting sun.

"I rather wonder (says Mr. Mason) that he rejected this stanza, as it not only has the same sort of Doric delicacy, which charms us peculiarly in this part of the Poem, but also completes the account of his whole day: whereas, this Evening scene being omitted, we have only his Morning walk, and his Noon-tide repose."
"Hard by yon wood, now smiling as in scorn,
  "Mutt'ring his wayward fancies he would
    "rove;
"Now drooping, woeful-wan, like one forlorn,
  "Or craz'd with care, or cross'd in hopeless
    "love.

"One morn I miss'd him on the custom'd hill,
  "Along the heath and near his fav'rite tree;
"Another came; nor yet beside the rill,
  "Nor up the lawn, nor at the wood was he;

"The next with dirges due in sad array
  "Slow thro' the church-way path we saw
    "him borne.
"Approach and read (for thou can'st read) the "lay
"Grav'd on the stone beneath yon aged
    "thorn."
THE EPITAPH [5].

Here rests his head upon the lap of Earth
A Youth, to Fortune and to Fame unknown:
Fair Science frown'd not on his humble birth,
And Melancholy mark'd him for her own.

Large was his bounty, and his soul sincere,
Heav'n did a recompence as largely send:
He gave to Mis'ry all he had, a tear,
He gain'd from Heav'n ('twas all he wish'd) a friend.

No farther seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode,

[5] Before the Epitaph, Mr. Gray originally inserted a very beautiful stanza, which was printed in some of the first editions, but afterwards omitted, because he thought that it was too long a parenthesis in this place. The lines however are, in themselves, exquisitely fine, and demand preservation.

There scatter'd oft, the earliest of the year,
By hands unseen are show'rs of violets found;
The redbreast loves to build and warble there,
And little footsteps lightly print the ground.
(There they alike in trembling hope repose,)
The bosom of his Father and his God [6].

[6] Of this Elegy Dr. Johnson (who has depreciated Mr. Gray as much as possible for his poetry in general) says, that it "abounds with images which find a mirror in every mind, and with sentiments to which every bosom returns an echo. The four stanzas beginning, 'Yet even these bones' are to me original: I have never seen the notions in any other place; yet he that reads them here persuades himself that he has always felt them. Had Gray written often thus, it had been vain to blame, and useless to praise him."
SUPPLEMENT:

COMPRISING THE

POSTHUMOUS POEMS AND FRAGMENTS

OF

MR. GRAY.
ODE

ON THE PLEASURE ARISING FROM VICISSITUDE.

[Left unfinished by Mr. Gray. With Additions, in Italics, by the late
Rev. Mr. Mason.]

Now the golden Morn aloft
Waves her dew-bespangled wing,
With vermil cheek, and whisper soft
She woos the tardy Spring:
Till April starts, and calls around
The sleeping fragrance from the ground;
And lightly o'er the living scene
Scatters his freshest, tenderest green.

New-born flocks, in rustic dance,
Frisking ply their feeble feet;
Forgetful of their wintry trance
The birds his presence greet:
But chief, the Sky-Lark warbles high
His trembling thrilling ecstasy;
And, lessening from the dazzled sight,
Melts into air and liquid light.

Rise, my Soul! on wings of fire,
   Rise the rapt'rous Choir among;
Hark! 'tis Nature strikes the Lyre,
   And leads the general song:
Warm let the lyric transport flow,
Warm as the ray that bids it glow;
And animates the vernal grove
With health, with harmony, and love.

Yesterday the sullen year
   Saw the snowy whirlwind fly;
Mute was the music of the air,
   The herd stood drooping by:
Their raptures now that wildly flow,
No yesterday, nor morrow know;
'Tis Man alone that joy descries
With forward, and reverted eyes.
Smiles on past Misfortune's brow
    Soft Reflection's hand can trace;
And o'er the cheek of Sorrow throw
    A melancholy grace;
While Hope prolongs our happier hour,
Or deepest shades, that dimly lower
And blacken round our weary way,
Gilds with a gleam of distant day.

Still, where rosy Pleasure leads,
    See a kindred Grief pursue;
Behind the steps that Misery treads
    Approaching Comfort view:
The hues of bliss more brightly glow,
Chastis'd by sabler tints of woe;
And blended form, with artful strife,
The strength and harmony of life.

See the Wretch, that long has tost
    On the thorny bed of pain,
At length repair his vigour lost,
    And breathe, and walk again:
The meanest floweret of the vale,
The simplest note that swells the gale,
The common sun, the air, the skies,
To Him are opening Paradise.

Humble Quiet builds her cell,
   Near the source whence Pleasure flows;
She eyes the clear crystalline * well,
   And tastes it as it goes.
*While far below the madding Crowd
Rush headlong to the dangerous flood,
Where broad and turbulent it sweeps,
   And perish in the boundless deeps.

Mark where Indolence, and Pride,
   Sooth'd by Flattery's tinkling sound,
Go, softly rolling, side by side,
   Their dull, but daily round:
To these, if Hebe's self should bring
The purest cup from Pleasure's spring,

* So Milton accents the word:
  "On the crystalline sky, in sapphire thron'd."
  Par. Lost, Book vi. v. 772.
Say, can they taste the flavour high
Of sober, simple, genuine joy?

Mark Ambition’s march sublime
   Up to Power’s meridian height;
While pale-ey’d Envy sees him climb,
   And sickens at the sight.
Phantoms of Danger, Death, and Dread,
Float hourly round Ambition’s head;
While Spleen, within his rival’s breast,
Sits brooding on her scorpion nest.

Happier he, the Peasant, far,
   From the pangs of Passion free,
That breathes the keen yet wholesome air
   Of rugged Penury.
He, when his morning task is done,
Can slumber in the noontide sun;
And hie him home, at evening’s close,
To sweet repast, and calm repose.
He, unconscious whence the bliss,
    Feels, and owns in carols rude,
That all the circling joys are his,
    Of dear Vicissitude.
From toil he wins his spirits light,
From busy day, the peaceful night;
Rich, from the very want of wealth,
In Heav'n's best treasures, Peace and Health.
TRANSLATION

OF

A PASSAGE FROM STATIUS.

[This was made by Mr. Gray while at Cambridge in the Year 1736, and at the age of 20.—It has place here as a curiosity; Mr. Mason having expressed his belief that it was Gray's first attempt in English Verse.]

Third in the labours of the Disc came on,
With sturdy step and slow, Hippomedon;
Artful and strong he pois'd the well-known weight,
By Phlegyas warn'd, and fir'd by Mnestheus' fate,
That to avoid, and this to emulate.

His vigorous arm he try'd before he flung,
Brac'd all his nerves, and every sinew strung;
Then with a tempest's whirl, and wary eye,
Pursu'd his cast, and hurl'd the orb on high;
The orb on high tenacious of its course,
True to the mighty arm that gave it force,
Far overleaps all bound, and joys to see
Its ancient lord secure of victory.
The theatre's green height and woody wall
Tremble ere it precipitates its fall;
The ponderous mass sinks in the cleaving ground,
While vales and woods and echoing hills rebound.
As when from Ætna's smoking summit broke,
The eyeless Cyclops heav'd the craggy rock;
Where Ocean frets beneath the dashing oar,
And parting surges round the vessel roar;
'Twas there he aim'd the meditated harm,
And scarce Ulysses scap'd his giant arm.
A tyger's pride the victor bore away,
With native spots and artful labour gay,
A shining border round the margin roll'd,
And calm'd the terrors of his claws in gold.

Cambridge, May 8, 1736.
FRAGMENT

OF A

LATIN POEM.

[This was sent by Mr. Gray to his friend West, with a reference to the following passage in Sandy's Travels: "West of Cicero's Villa stands the eminent Gaurus, a stony and desolate mountain, in which there are diverse obscure caverns, choaked almost with earth, where many have consumed much fruitless industry in searching for treasure. The famous Lucrine Lake extended formerly from Avernus to the aforesaid Gaurus: But is now no other than a little sedgy plash, choaked up by the horrible and astonishing eruption of the new mountain; whereof, as oft as I think, I am easy to credit whatsoever is wonderful. For who here knows not, or who elsewhere will believe, that a mountain should arise, (partly out of a lake and partly out of the sea) in one day and a night, unto such a height as to contend in altitude with the high mountains adjoining? In the year of our Lord 1538, on the 29th of September, when for certain days foregoing the country hereabout was so vexed with perpetual earthquakes, as no one house was left so entire as not to expect an immediate ruin; after that the sea had retired two hundred paces from the shore, (leaving abundance of fish, and springs of fresh water rising in the bottom) this mountain visibly ascended, about the second hour of the night, with an hideous roaring, horribly vomiting stones and such store of cinders as over-whelmed all the building thereabout, and the salubrious baths of Tripergula, for so many ages celebrated; consumed the vines to ashes, killing birds and beasts: the fearful inhabitants of Puzzol flying through the dark with their wives and children; naked, defiled, crying out, and detesting their calamities. Manifold mischiefs have they suffered by the barbarous, yet none like this which Nature inflicted.—This new mountain, when newly raised, had a number of issues; at some of them smoking and sometimes flaming; at others disgorging rivulets of hot waters; keeping]
NEC procul infelix se tollit in ãthera Gaurus,
Prospiciens vitreum lugenti vertice pontum:
Tristior ille diu, & veteri desuetus olivâ
Gaurus, pampineæque eheu jam nescius umbræ;
Horrendi tam sæva premit vicinia montis,
Attonitumque urget latus, exuritque ferentem.
Nam fama est olim, mediâ dum rura silebant
Nocte, Deo victa, & molli perfusa quiete,
Infremuisse æquor ponti, auditamque per omnes
Latè tellurem surdùm immugire cavernas:
Quo sonitu nemora alta tremunt; tremit excitâ tuto
Parthenopæa sinu, flammantisque ora Vesevi.
At subitò se aperire solum, vastosque recessus
Pandere sub pedibus, nigrâque voragine fauces;
Tum piceas cinerum glomerare sub ãthere nubes
Vorticibus rapidis, ardentique imbre procellam.
Præcipites fugere ferae, perque avia longè
Sylvarum fugit pastor, juga per deserta,
Ah, miser! increpitans sæpè altâ voce per umbram
Nequicquam natos, creditque audire sequentes.
Atque ille excelso rupis de vertice solus
Respectans notasque domos, & dulcia regna,
Nil usquàm videt infelix præter mare tristi
Lumine percussum, & pallentes sulphure campos,
Fumumque, flammisque, rotataque turbine saxa.
Quin ubi detonuit fragor, & lux redita coelo;
Mæstos confluere agricolas, passuque videres
Tandem iterum timido deserta requere tecta:
Sperantes, si forte oculis, si forte darentur
Uxorum cineres, miserorumve ossa parentum
(Tenuia, sed tanti saltem solatia luctus)
Unà colligere & justâ componere in urnâ.
Uxorum nusquam cineres, nusquam ossa parentum
(Spem miseram!) assuetosve Lares, aut rura vide-bunt.
Quippe ubi planities campi diffusa jacebat;
Mons novus: ille supercilium, frontemque favillâ
Incanum ostentans, ambustis cautibus, æquor
Subjectum, stragemque suam, mæsta arva, minaci
Despicit imperio, soloque in littore regnat.

Hinc infame loci nomen, multosque per annos
Immemor antiquæ laudis, nescire labores,
Vomeris, & nullo tellus revirescere cultu.
Non avium colles, non carmine matutino
Pastorum resonare; adeò undique dirus habebat
Informes latè horror agros saltusque vacantes.
Sæpius et longé detorquens navita proram
Monstrabat digito littus, sævæque revolvens
Funera narrabat noctis, vetteremque ruinam.

Montis adhuc facies manet hirta atque aspera
saxis:
Sed furor extinctus jamdudum, & flamma quievit,
Quæ nascenti aderat; seu forté bituminis atri
Defluxere olim rivi, atque effoeta lacuna
Pabula sufficere ardori, viresque recusat;
Sive in visceribus meditans incendia jam nunc
(Horrendùm) arcanis glomerat genti esse futuræ
Exitio, sparsos tacitusque recolligit ignes.

Raro per clivos haud secius ordine vidi
Canescentem oleam: longum post tempus amicti
Vite virent tumuli; patriamque revisere gaudens
Bacchus in assuetis tenerum caput exerit arvis
Vix tandem, infideo audet se credere cælo[1].

[1] The following Translation may not be unacceptable to the mere English Reader. It appeared in the Gentleman’s Magazine for July, 1775:

On the fam’d shore where fierce volcanos glow,
And overlook the shining deeps below,
Old Gaurus rears his inauspicious head,
His vines consum’d, and all his honours fled;
So near a new-sprung mountain now abides,
Burning his groves, and thundering at his sides.
For Fame reports of old, while all around
The country lay in solemn silence drown’d,
While rustics, thoughtless of approaching woes,
Enjoy’d the grateful blessings of repose,
The swelling surges lash the sounding shores,
The lab’ring Earth thro’ all her caverns roars;
Loud echoes from the lofty woods rebound,
Fair Naples from her deepest bay profound,
And dread Vesuvius, tremble at the sound.
Sudden the yawning Earth discloses wide
Her dreadful jaws; forth-issuing in a tide,
Black pitchy clouds with bursting flames conspire
To whelm the landscape in a flood of fire.
The beasts are fled: along the pathless waste
The frightened shepherd flies with eager haste,
His ling’ring children calls, and thinks he hears
Their distant footsteps reach his list’ning ears;
Then lonely climbs a rock’s stupendous height,
And backward o’er the plain directs his sight,
If still, perchance, to meet his longing eyes,
His much-lov’d woods, and humble cottage rise.
No object meets his eyes, unhappy swain!
But dreadful gleams reflected from the main,
The earth beneath with flames of sulphur torn,
And fiery stones in whirling eddies borne.

The storms at length subside, the flames decay,
And op'ning Heav'n restores the face of day:
When, lo! the gath'ring hinds are seen around,
With trembling steps to tread the dreary ground;

In hopes (if yet a slender hope remain)
To trace their dwellings on the desert plain,
Their wives' and wretched sires' remains to mourn,
And decent place within the sacred urn.

(Small consolation granted to their woes,
But all, alas! their hapless state bestows.)

Unhappy men! no wives' or sires' remains
Shall greet your eyes, or mitigate your pains;
For where your peaceful dwellings late were spread,
The new-rais'd mountain rears his ghastly head,
With rocks deform'd and hoary ashes crown'd,
And proud o'erlooks the subject plains around,
With devastation threats the country o'er,
And reigns despotic on the lonely shore.

A name ill omen'd hence the country gains,
And long neglected lay the barren plains.
No more the plough is seen to break the soil,
Or fruitful fields to crown the peasant's toil;
No more is heard the shepherd's cheerful lay,
Or tuneful birds to hail the rising day:

So wide is spread a face of ruin o'er!
And oft the cautious seaman from the shore
Averts his slender bark, avoids the strand,
And pointing shews the inauspicious land;
Relates the horrors of the fatal night,
And all the dreary landscape rises to the sight.

Still rough with stones appears the mountain-head,
His former flames extinct, his terrors fled;
Whether the sulphurous rivers, which supplied
Of old his bowels with a constant tide,
By time exhausted, with a fiery store
Suffice at length to feed the flames no more;
Or whether, while the ruin seems to sleep,
He hoards fresh matter in his caverns deep,
Prepar'd (tremendous thought!) with doubled rage,
To spread destruction in a future age.

The face of nature now is chang'd around,
The hills appear with whit'ning olives crown'd.
And Bacchus, who so long the coast had fled,
Again delights to lift his festive head,
With trembling steps resumes his former stand,
And clothes once more with blushing vines the land.
ODE

WRITTEN IN THE

ALBUM OF THE GRANDE CHARTREUSE,

IN DAUPHINY, AUGUST 1741.

O H Tu, severi Religio loci, Quocunque gaudes nomine (non leve
Nativa nam certè fluenta
Numen habet, veteresque sylvas;
Præentiorem & conspicimus Deum
Per invias rupes, fera per juga,
Clivosque præruptos, sonantes
Inter aquas, nemorumque noctem;
Quàm si repòstus sub trabe citreâ
Fulgeret auro, & Phidiacâ manu)
Salve vocanti rité, fesso et
Da placidam juveni quietem.
Quod si invidendis sedibus, & frui
Fortuna sacrâ lege silentii
   Vetat volentem, me resorbens
   In medios violenta fluctus:
Saltem remoto des, Pater, angulo
Horas senectâe ducere liberas;
   Tutumque vulgari tumultu
Surripias, hominumque curis. [1]

[1] Thus imitated by a Gentleman of Sunderland:

Hear, awful genius of the solemn grove,
   (And say what title best can please thine ear;
Those age-struck woods and native rivers prove
   No common genius bears dominion here.

The trackless rocks, the mountain's savage height,
   The broken cliff, inviting fell despair,
The deep-brown grove where reigns eternal night,
   And sounding water-falls, the God declare.

In glory more than if the Citrean beam,
   And Phidian art its nicest aid bestow'd,
Or high-wrought gold had shed its richest gleam,
   To deck the fane of the recumbent God;

Hear then, dread genius of the solemn grove!
   Now be thy mighty power on me confest,
Propitious to thy suppliant's wishes prove,
   And give him to the placid joys of rest:

But, if stern Fortune shou'd forbid my flight,
   To taste the sweets of sacred Silence's reign,
Shou'd she recal me from the darling sight,
   And dash amid the storms of life again;
At least allow to my declining age
A calm retreat from all the cares of life,
Safe from the busy world's tumultuous rage,
And far beyond the reach of vulgar strife.

Another Imitation of this Ode (I believe by Mr. Seward, the elegant Anecdotist) appeared in the European Magazine for 1791; and, as it varies in measure from the preceding, the Reader may not be displeased with its insertion.

Oh, Genius of this hallow'd place
(The seat of sanctity and grace,)
Whatever name shall greet thy ear,
Or holy, reverend, or severe,
(For ah! no common power pervades
These sacred streams, these antique glades ;)
And sure we more conspicuous see
The presence of the Deity
In rocks abrupt, in foaming floods,
"In the meridian night of woods*!
Than if, on throne of ivory plac'd,
With gold and gems profusely grac'd,
In robe of Tyrian purple dress'd,
He Phidias' magic hand confess'd.
O! thus invoke'd, propitious Power,
The rest of one, one short-liv'd hour
On thy poor suppliant bestow,
A wand'rer through this wild of woe.
For, ah! him cruel fate impels
To quit thy calm and peaceful cells,
Where Solitude and Silence reign,
With all the Virtues in their train
(Where Contemplation, nymph serene,
With gentle step and placid mien,
With Saints and Confessors of old
High sacred converse seem to hold ;
Where Piety, with up-cast eyes,
Dissolves in holy ecstasies:

* Mr. Merry.
And scorning aught of this vile earth,
That Heaven seeks that gave her birth;
Where Charity, above the rest,
E’en in the desert spreads a feast;
But, ah! stern Fate, with ruthless force,
Impels him thro’ life’s rapid course,
Where his frail bark, by tempests tost,
May in the vast abyss be lost;
And thro’ the winds and waters roar
Some pitying port in vain implore.”
THE

FIRST SCENE OF A TRAGEDY,

DESIGNED IN 1742, BY MR. GRAY,

ON THE SUBJECT OF

THE DEATH OF AGRIPPINA. [1]

[Mr. Mason’s account of this Fragment is as follows: “The Britannicus of M. Racine, I know, was one of Mr. Gray’s most favourite plays; and the admirable manner in which I have heard him say that he saw it represented at Paris, seems to have led him to choose the death of Agrippina for this his first and only effort in the drama.
The execution of it also, as far as it goes, is so very much in Racine’s taste, that I suspect, if that great poet had been born an Englishman, he would have written precisely in the same style and maner. However, as there is at present in this nation a general prejudice against declamatory plays, I agree with a learned friend, who perused the manuscript, that this fragment will be little relished by the many; yet the admirable strokes of nature and character with which it abounds, and the majesty of its diction, prevent me from withholding from the few, who I expect will relish it, so great a curiosity (to call it nothing more) as part of a tragedy written by Mr. Gray. These persons well know, that till style and sentiment be a little more regarded, mere action and passion will never secure reputation to the Author, whatever they may do to the Actor. It is the business of the one “to strut and fret his hour upon the stage,” and if he frets and struts enough, he is sure to find his reward in the plaudit of an upper gallery; but the other ought to have some regard to the cooler judgment of the closet: For I will be bold to say, that if Shakespeare himself had not written a multitude of passages which please there as much as they do on the stage, his reputation would not stand so universally high as it does at present. Many of these passages, to the shame of our theatrical taste, are omitted constantly in the representation: But I say not this from conviction that the mode of writing, which Mr. Gray pursued, is the best for dramatic purposes. I think myself, that a medium between the French and English taste would be preferable to either; and yet this medium, if hit with the greatest nicety, would fail of success on our theatre, and that for a very obvious reason.

Actors (I speak of the troop collectively) must all learn to speak as well as act, in order to do justice to such a drama.

But let me hasten to give the reader what little insight I can into Mr.
Gray's plan, as I find, and select it from two detached papers. The Title and Dramatis Personæ are as follow:

AGRIPPINA,

A TRAGEDY.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

Agrippina, the Empress mother.
Nero, the Emperor.
Poppæa, believed to be in love with Otho.
Otho, a young man of quality, in love with Poppæa.
Seneca, the Emperor's preceptor.
Anicetus, Captain of the Guards.
Demetrius, the Cynic, friend to Seneca.
Aceronia, Confidant to Agrippina.

SCENE, the Emperor's villa at Baiae.

"The argument drawn out by him, in these two papers, under the idea of a plot and under-plot, I shall here unite; as it will tend to show that the action itself was possest of sufficient unity."
The drama opens with the indignation of Agrippina, at receiving her son's orders from Anictetus to remove from Baiae, and to have her guard taken from her. At this time Otho having conveyed Poppaea from the house of her husband Rufus Crispinus, brings her to Baiae, where he means to conceal her among the crowd; or, if his fraud is discovered, to have recourse to the Emperor's authority; but, knowing the lawless temper of Nero, he determines not to have recourse to that expedient but on the utmost necessity.

In the meantime he commits her to the care of Anictetus, whom he takes to be his friend, and in whose age he thinks he may safely confide. Nero is not yet come to Baiae; but Seneca, whom he sends before him, informs Agrippina of the accusation concerning Rubellius Plancus, and desires her to clear herself, which she does briefly; but demands to see her son, who, on his arrival, acquires her of all suspicion, and restores her to her honours. In the mean while Anictetus, to whose care Poppaea had been entrusted by Otho, contrives the following plot to ruin Agrippina: He betrays his trust to Otho, and brings Nero, as it were by chance, to the sight of the beautiful Poppaea; the Emperor is immediately struck with her charms, and she, by a feigned resistance, increases his passion; though, in reality, she is from the first dazzled with the prospect of empire, and forgets Otho: She therefore joins with Anictetus in his design of ruining Agrippina, soon perceiving that it will be for her interest. Otho hearing that the Emperor had seen Poppaea, is much enraged; but not knowing that this interview was obtained through the treachery of Anictetus, is readily persuaded by him to see Agrippina in secret, and acquaint her with his fears that her son Nero would marry Poppaea. Agrippina, to support her own power, and to wean the Emperor from the love of Poppaea, gives Otho encouragement, and promises to support him. Anictetus secretly introduces Nero to hear their discourse; who resolves immediately on his mother's death, and, by Anictetus's means, to destroy her by drowning. A solemn feast, in honour of their reconciliation, is to be made; after which she being to go by sea to Bauli, the ship is so contrived as to sink or crush her; she escapes by accident, and returns to Baiae. In this interval, Otho has an interview with Poppaea; and being duped a second time by Anictetus and her, determines to fly with her into Greece, by means of a vessel which is to be furnished by Anictetus; but he, pretending to remove Poppaea on board in the night, con"veys her to Nero's apartment: She there encourages and determines Nero to banish Otho, and finish the horrid deed he had attempted on his mother. Anicetus undertakes to execute his resolves; and, under pretence of a plot upon the Emperor's life, is sent with a guard to murder Agrippina, who is still at Baiae in imminent fear, and irresolute how to conduct herself. The account of her death, and the Emperor's horror and fruitless remorse, finishes the drama."

ACT I. SCENE I.

AGrippina, Aceronia.

AGrippina.

'T
IS well, begone! your errand is perform'd:
[Speaks as to Anicetus entering.
The message needs no comment. Tell your master,
His mother shall obey him. Say you saw her
Yielding due reverence to his high command:
Alone, unguarded, and without a Lictor,
As fits the daughter of Germanicus.
Say, she retired to Antium; there to tend
Her household cares, a woman's best employment.
What if you add, how she turn'd pale, and trembled;
You think, you spied a tear stand in her eye,
And would have dropp'd but that her pride restrain'd it?
(Go! you can paint it well) 'twill profit you,
And please the stripling. Yet 'twould dash his joy
To hear the spirit of Britannicus
Yet walks on earth: at least there are who know
Without a spell to raise, and bid it fire
A thousand haughty hearts, unus'd to shake
When a boy frowns, nor to be lur'd with smiles
To taste of hollow kindness, or partake
His hospitable board: They are aware
Of the unpledg'd bowl, they love not Aconite.

ACERONIA.
He's gone; and much I hope these walls alone
And the mute air are privy to your passion.
Forgive your servant's fears, who sees the danger
Which fierce resentment cannot fail to raise
In haughty youth, and irritated power.

AGRIPPINA.
And dost thou talk to me, to me, of danger,
Of haughty youth and irritated power,
To her that gave it being, her that arm'd
This painted Jove, and taught his novice hand
To aim the forked bolt; while he stood trembling
Scar'd at the sound, and dazzled with its brightness?

'Tis like, thou hast forgot, when yet a stranger
To adoration, to the grateful steam
Of flattery's incense, and obsequious vows
From voluntary realms, a puny boy,
Deck'd with no other lustre than the blood
Of Agrippina's race, he liv'd unknown
To fame, or fortune; haply eyed at distance
Some edileship, ambitious of the power
To judge of weights and measures; scarcely dar'd
On expectation's strongest wing to soar
High as the consulate, that empty shade
Of long-forgotten liberty: When I
Op'd his young eye to bear the blaze of greatness;
Shew'd him where empire tower'd, and bade him strike
The noble quarry. Gods! then was the time
To shrink from danger; fear might then have worn
The mask of prudence; but a heart like mine,
A heart that glows with the pure Julian fire,
If bright Ambition from her craggy seat
Display the radiant prize, will mount undaunted,
Gain the rough heights, and grasp the dangerous honour.

ACERONIA.

Thro' various life I have pursued your steps,
Have seen your soul, and wonder'd at its daring:
Hence rise my fears. Nor am I yet to learn
How vast the debt of gratitude which Nero
To such a mother owes; the world, you gave him,
Suffices not to pay the obligation.

I well remember too (for I was present)
When in a secret and dead hour of night,
Due sacrifice perform'd with barb'rous rites
Of mutter'd charms, and solemn invocation,
You bade the Magi call the dreadful powers,
That read futurity, to know the fate
Impending o'er your son: Their answer was,
If the son reign the mother perishes.
Perish (you cry'd) the mother! reign the son!
He reigns, the rest is heav'n's; who oft has bade,
Ev'n when its will seem'd wrote in lines of blood,
Th' unthought event disclose a whiter meaning.
Think too how oft in weak and sickly minds
The sweets of kindness lavishly indulg'd
Rankle to gall; and benefits too great
To be repaid, sit heavy on the soul,
As unrequited wrongs. The willing homage
Of prostrate Rome, the senate's joint applause,
The riches of the earth, the train of pleasures
That wait on youth, and arbitrary sway;
These were your gift, and with them you bestow'd
The very power he has to be ungrateful.

AGRIPPINA.

Thus ever grave and undisturb'd reflection
Pours its cool dictates in the madding ear
Of rage, and thinks to quench the fire it feels not.
Say'st thou I must be cautious, must be silent,
And tremble at the phantom I have rais'd?
Carry to him thy timid counsels. He Perchance may heed 'em: Tell him too, that one
Who had such liberal power to give, may still
With equal power resume that gift, and raise
A tempest that shall shake her own creation
To its original atoms—tell me! say
This mighty Emperor, this dreaded Hero,
Has he beheld the glittering front of war?
Knows his soft ear the trumpet's thrilling voice,
And outcry of the battle? Have his limbs
Sweat under iron harness? Is he not
The silken son of dalliance, nurs'd in Ease
And Pleasure's flowery lap?—Rubellius lives,
And Sylla has his friends, tho' school'd by fear
To bow the supple knee, and court the times
With shows of fair obeisance; and a call,
Like mine, might serve belike to wake pretensions
Drowsier than theirs, who boast the genuine blood
Of our imperial house.

ACERONIA.

Did I not wish to check this dangerous passion,
I might remind my mistress that her nod
Can rouse eight hardy legions, wont to stem
With stubborn nerves the tide, and face the rigour
Of bleak Germania's snows. Four, not less brave,
That in Armenia quell the Parthian force
Under the warlike Corbulo, by you
Mark'd for their leader: These, by ties confirm'd,
Of old respect and gratitude, are yours.
Surely the Masians too, and those of Egypt,
Have not forgot your sire: The eye of Rome
And the Prætorian camp have long rever'd,
With custom'd awe, the daughter, sister, wife,
And mother of their Cæsars.

AGrippina.

Ha! by Juno,
It bears a noble semblance. On this base
My great revenge shall rise; or say we sound
The trump of liberty; there will not want,
Even in the servile senate, ears to own
Her spirit-stirring voice; Soranus there,
And Cassius; Vetus too, and Thrasea,
Minds of the antique cast, rough, stubborn souls,
That struggle with the yoke. How shall the spark
Unquenchable, that glows within their breasts,
Blaze into freedom, when the idle herd
(Slaves from the womb, created but to stare,
And bellow in the Circus) yet will start,
And shake 'em at the name of liberty,
Stung by a senseless word, a vain tradition,
As there were magic in it? Wrinkled beldams
Teach it their grandchildren, as somewhat rare
That anciently appear'd, but when, extends Beyond their chronicle—oh! 'tis a cause
To arm the hand of childhood, and rebrace
The slacken'd sinews of time-wearied age.

Yes, we may meet, ungrateful boy, we may!
Again the buried genius of old Rome
Shall from the dust uprear his reverend head,
Rous'd by the shout of millions: There before
His high tribunal thou and I appear.
Let majesty sit on thy awful brow,
And lighten from thy eye: Around thee call
The gilded swarm that wantons in the sunshine
Of thy full favour; Seneca be there
In gorgeous phrase of laboured eloquence
To dress thy plea, and Burrhus strengthen it
With his plain soldier's oath, and honest seeming.
Against thee, liberty and Agrippina:
The world the prize; and fair befal the victors.

But soft! why do I waste the fruitless hours
In threats unexecuted? Haste thee, fly
These hated walls that seem to mock my shame,
And cast me forth in duty to their lord.

ACERONIA.
'Tis time we go, the sun is high advanc'd,
And, ere mid-day, Nero will come to Baiae.

AGRIPPINA.
My thought aches at him; not the basilisk
More deadly to the sight, than is to me
The cool injurious eye of frozen kindness.
I will not meet its poison. Let him feel
Before he sees me.
ACERONIA.

Why then stays my sovereign,
Where he soon may——

AGRIPPINA.

   Yes, I will be gone,
But not to Antium—all shall be confess’d,
Whate’er the frivolous tongue of giddy fame
Has spread among the crowd; things that but whisper’d
Have arch’d the hearer’s brow, and rivetted
His eyes in fearful ecstasy: No matter
What; so’t be strange, and dreadful.—Sorceries,
Assassinations, poisonings—the deeper
My guilt, the blacker his ingratitude.

   And you, ye manes of Ambition’s victims,
Enshrined Claudius, with the pitied ghosts
Of the Syllani, doom’d to early death,
(Ye unavailing horrors, fruitless crimes!)
If from the realms of night my voice ye hear,
In lieu of penitence, and vain remorse,
Accept my vengeance. Tho’ by me ye bled,
He was the cause. My love, my fears for him,
Dried the soft springs of pity in my heart,
And froze them up with deadly cruelty.
Yet if your injur’d shades demand my fate,
If murder cries for murder, blood for blood,
Let me not fall alone; but crush his pride,
And sink the traitor in his mother’s ruin.

[Exeunt.

---

SCENE II.

OTHò, POPPÆA.

OTHò.

Thus far we’re safe. Thanks to the rosy queen
Of amorous thefts: And had her wanton son
Lent us his wings, we could not have beguil’d
With more elusive speed the dazzled sight
Of wakeful jealousy. Be gay securely;
Dispel, my fair, with smiles, the tim’rous cloud
That hangs on thy clear brow. So Helen look’d,
So her white neck reclin’d, so was she borne
By the young Trojan to his gilded bark
With fond reluctance, yielding modesty,
And oft reverted eye, as if she knew not
Whether she fear'd, or wish'd to be pursued.

* * * * * * * * *
HYMN TO IGNORANCE.

A FRAGMENT.

[This is supposed to have been written about the year 1742, the time when Mr. Gray returned to Cambridge.]

HAIL, Horrors, hail! ye ever gloomy bowers,
Ye gothic fanes, and antiquated towers,
Where rushy Camus' slowly-winding flood
Perpetual draws his humid train of mud:
Glad I revisit thy neglected reign,
Oh take me to thy peaceful shade again.
But chiefly thee, whose influence breath'd from high
Augments the native darkness of the sky;
Ah, Ignorance! soft salutary Power!
Prostrate with filial reverence I adore.
Thrice hath Hyperion roll'd his annual race,
Since weeping I forsook thy fond embrace.

k 2
Oh say, successful do'st thou still oppose
Thy leaden Ægis 'gainst our ancient foes?
Still stretch, tenacious of thy right divine,
The massy sceptre o'er thy slumb'ring line?
And dews Lethean thro' the land dispense
To steep in slumbers each benighted sense?
If any spark of Wit's delusive ray
Break out, and flash a momentary day,
With damp, cold touch forbid it to aspire,
And huddle up in fogs the dangerous fire.

Oh say—she hears me not, but, careless grown,
Lethargic nods upon her ebon throne.
Goddess! awake, arise, alas my fears!
Can powers immortal feel the force of years?
Not thus of old, with ensigns wide unfurl'd,
She rode triumphant o'er the vanquish'd world;
Fierce nations own'd her unresisted might,
And all was Ignorance and all was Night.

Oh! sacred Age! Oh! Times for ever lost!
(The Schoolman's glory, and the Churchman's boast.)
For ever gone—yet still to Fancy new,
Her rapid wings the transient scene pursue,
And bring the buried ages back to view.

High on her car, behold the Grandam ride
Like old Sesostris with barbaric pride;

* * * * * a team of harness'd monarchs bend

* * * * * * * * * *
THE

ALLIANCE

OF

EDUCATION AND GOVERNMENT.

A FRAGMENT*.

ESSAY I.

--- Πόταργ' ἐγαθεί; τὰν γὰρ δομίαν
Οὐτὶ πω εἰς Αἴδαν γε τὸν ἐκλειδώτοια φυλαξεῖς.

THEOCRITUS.

As sickly plants betray a niggard earth,
Whose barren bosom starves her gen’rous birth,
Nor genial warmth, nor genial juice retains,
Their roots to feed, and fill their verdant veins:

* In a Note in his Roman History, Mr. Gibbon says, “Instead of compiling Tables of Chronology and Natural History, why did not
Mr. Gray apply the powers of his genius to finish the philosophic poem of which he has left such an exquisite specimen?”
And as in climes, where Winter holds his reign,
The soil, tho' fertile, will not teem in vain,
Forbids her gems to swell, her shades to rise,
Nor trusts her blossoms to the churlish skies:
So draw Mankind in vain the vital airs,
Uniform'd, unfriend'd, by those kindly cares,
That health and vigour to the soul impart,
Spread the young thought, and warm the opening heart:
So fond instruction on the growing powers
Of nature idly lavishes her stores,
If equal Justice with unclouded face
Smile not indulgent on the rising race,
And scatter with a free, tho' frugal hand,
Light golden showers of plenty o'er the land:
But Tyranny has fix'd her empire there,
To check their tender hopes with chilling fear,
And blast the blooming promise of the year.

This spacious animated scene survey,
From where the rolling Orb, that gives the day,
His sable sons with nearer course surrounds
To either pole, and life's remotest bounds.
How rude soe'er th' exterior form we find,
Howe'er opinion tinge the varied mind,
Alike to all, the kind, impartial Heav'n
The sparks of truth and happiness has giv'n:
With sense to feel, with memory to retain,
They follow pleasure, and they fly from pain;
Their judgment mends the plan their fancy draws,
The event presages, and explores the cause;
The soft returns of gratitude they know,
By fraud elude, by force repel the foe;
While mutual wishes, mutual woes endear
The social smile and sympathetic tear.

Say, then, thro' ages by what fate confin'd
To different climes seem different souls assign'd?
Here measur'd laws and philosophic ease
Fix, and improve the polish'd arts of peace;
There industry and gain their vigils keep,
Command the winds, and tame the unwilling deep:
Here force and hardy deeds of blood prevail;
There languid pleasure sighs in every gale.
Oft o'er the trembling nations from afar
Has Scythia breath'd the living cloud of war;
And, where the deluge burst, with sweepy sway
Their arms, their kings, their gods were roll'd away.
As oft have issued, host impelling host,
The blue-eyed myriads from the Baltic coast.
The prostrate South to the Destroyer yields
Her boasted titles, and her golden fields:
With grim delight the Brood of winter view
A brighter day, and Heav'ns of azure hue,
Scent the new fragrance of the breathing rose,
And quaff the pendent vintage as it grows.
Proud of the yoke, and pliant to the rod,
Why yet does Asia dread a monarch's nod,
While European freedom still withstands
Th' encroaching tide that drowns her lessening lands;
And sees far off with an indignant groan
Her native plains, and empires once her own?
Can opener skies and suns of fiercer flame
O'erpower the fire that animates our frame;
As lamps, that shed at eve a cheerful ray,
Fade and expire beneath the eye of day?
Need we the influence of the Northern star
To string our nerves and steel our hearts to war?
And, where the face of Nature laughs around,
Must sick'ning Virtue fly the tainted ground?
Unmanly thought! what seasons can controul,
What fancied zone can circumscribe the soul,
Who, conscious of the source from whence she springs,
By Reason's light, on Resolution's wings,
Spite of her frail companion, dauntless goes
O'er Lybia's deserts and thro' Zembla's snows?
She bids each slumb'ring energy awake,
Another touch, another temper take,
Suspends the inferior laws that rule our clay:
The stubborn elements confess her sway;
Their little wants, their low desires, refine,
And raise the mortal to a height divine.

Not but the human fabric from the birth
Imbibes a flavour of its parent earth.
As various tracts enforce a various toil,
The manners speak the idiom of their soil.
An iron-race the mountain-cliffs maintain,
Foes to the gentler genius of the plain:
For where unwearied sinews must be found
With side-long plough to quell the flinty ground,
To turn the torrent’s swift-descending flood,
To brave the savage rushing from the wood,
What wonder, if to patient valour train’d,
They guard with spirit what by strength they gain’d?
And while their rocky ramparts round they see,
The rough abode of want and liberty,
(As lawless force from confidence will grow)
Insult the plenty of the vales below?
What wonder, in the sultry climes, that spread,
Where Nile redundant o’er his summer-bed
From his broad bosom life and verdure flings,
And broods o’er Ægypt with his wat’ry wings,
If with advent’rous oar and ready sail
The dusky people drive before the gale;
Or on frail floats to neighb’ring cities ride,
That rise and glitter o’er the ambient tide

* * * * * * * * *
A LONG STORY.

[Mr. Gray's Elegy in the Country Church-Yard, before it appeared in print, was handed about in manuscript; and amongst other eminent personages who saw and admired it, was the Lady Cobham, who resided at the Mansion-House at Stoke-Pogeis. The performance induced her to wish for the author's acquaintance; and Lady Schaub and Miss Speed, then at her house, undertook to effect it. These two ladies waited upon the author at his aunt's solitary mansion, where he at that time resided; and not finding him at home, they left their names. Mr. Gray, surprised at such a compliment, returned the visit. And as the beginning of this acquaintance wore a little of the face of romance, he soon after gave a fanciful and pleasant account of it in the following copy of verses, which he entitled A Long Story.]

In Britain's isle, no matter where,
An ancient pile of building stands [1]:
The Huntingdons and Hattons there
Employ'd the power of Fairy hands

[1] The mansion-house at Stoke-Pogeis, then in the possession of Viscountess Cobham. The house formerly belonged to the Earls of Huntington and the family of Hatton.
To raise the ceiling's fretted height,
   Each pannel in achievements clothing,
Rich windows that exclude the light,
   And passages, that lead to nothing.

Full oft within the spacious walls,
   When he had fifty winters o'er him,
My grave Lord-Keeper led the brawls [2];
   The seals and maces danc'd before him.

His bushy-beard, and shoe-strings green,
   His high-crown'd hat, and satin doublet,
Mov'd the stout heart of England's Queen,
   Tho' Pope and Spaniard could not trouble it.

What, in the very first beginning!
   Shame of the versifying tribe!
Your hist'ry whither are you spinning!
   Can you do nothing but describe?

[2] Sir Christopher Hatton, promoted by Queen Elizabeth for his graceful person and fine dancing.—Brawls were a sort of figure-dance, then in vogue.
A house there is (and that's enough)
   From whence one fatal morning issues
A brace of warriors, not in buff,
   But rustling in their silks and tissues [3].

The first came cap-a-pee from France,
   Her conquering destiny fulfilling,
Whom meaner beauties eye askance,
   And vainly ape her art of killing.

The other Amazon kind heav'n
   Had arm'd with spirit, wit, and satire:
But Cobham had the polish giv'n,
   And tipp'd her arrows with good-nature.

To celebrate her eyes, her air——
   Coarse panegyrics would but teaze her.
Melissa is her Nom de Guerre.
   Alas, who would not wish to please her!

[3] The reader is already apprized who these Ladies were; the two descriptions are prettily contrasted; and nothing can be more happily turned than the compliment to Lady Cobham in the eighth stanza.
With bonnet blue and capuchine,
And aprons long they hid their armour,
And veil'd their weapons, bright and keen,
In pity to the country farmer.

Fame, in the shape of Mr. P—t, [4]
(By this time all the parish know it)
Had told that thereabouts there lurk'd
A wicked Imp they call a Poet:

Who prowl'd the country far and near,
Bewitch'd the children of the peasants,
Dried up the cows, and lam'd the deer,
And suck'd the eggs, and kill'd the pheasants.

My Lady heard their joint petition,
Swore by her coronet and ermine,
She'd issue out her high commission
To rid the manor of such vermin.

[4] It has been said, that this Gentleman, a neighbour and acquaintance of Mr. Gray's in the country, was much displeased at the liberty here taken with his name; yet, surely, without any great reason.
The Heroines undertook the task,
    Thro' lanes unknown, o'er stiles they ventur'd,
Rapp'd at the door, nor stay'd to ask,
    But bounce into the parlour enter'd.

The trembling family they daunt,
    They flirt, they sing, they laugh, they tattle,
Rummage his Mother, pinch his Aunt,
    And up stairs in a whirlwind rattle.

Each hole and cupboard they explore,
    Each creek and cranny of his chamber,
Run hurry-skurry round the floor,
    And o'er the bed and tester clamber;

Into the drawers and china pry,
    Papers and books, a huge imbroglio!
Under a tea-cup he might lie,
    Or creased, like dogs-ears, in a folio.

On the first marching of the troops,
    The Muses, hopeless of his pardon,
Convey'd him underneath their hoops
    To a small closet in the garden.
So Rumour says: (Who will, believe.)
But that they left the door a-jar,
Where, safe and laughing in his sleeve,
He heard the distant din of war.

Short was his joy. He little knew
The power of Magic was no fable;
Out of the window, whisk, they flew,
But left a spell upon the table.

The words too eager to unriddle,
The Poet felt a strange disorder;
Transparent bird-lime form'd the middle,
And chains invisible the border.

So cunning was the Apparatus,
The powerful pot-hooks did so move him,
That, will he, nill he, to the Great House
He went, as if the Devil drove him.

Yet on his way (no sign of grace,
For folks in fear are apt to pray)
To Phœbus he preferr’d his case,
   And begg’d his aid that dreadful day.

The Godhead wou’d have back’d his quarrel;
   But with a blush on recollection,
Own’d, that his quiver and his laurel
   ’Gainst four such eyes were no protection.

The Court was sate, the Culprit there,
   Forth from their gloomy mansions creeping
The Lady Janes and Joans repair,
   And from the gallery stand peeping:

Such as in silence of the night
   Come (sweep) along some winding entry,
(Styack (n) has often seen the sight)
   Or at the chapel-door stand centry:

In peaked hoods and mantles tarnish’d,
   Sour visages, enough to scare ye,
High dames of honour once, that garnish’d
   The drawing-room of fierce Queen Mary.

(n) The Housekeeper.
The Peeress comes. The audience stare,
And doff their hats with due submission:
She curtsies, as she takes her chair,
To all the people of condition.

The Bard, with many an artful fib,
Had in imagination fenc'd him,
Disprov'd the arguments of Squib (o),
And all that Groom (p) could urge against him.

But soon his rhetoric forsook him,
When he the solemn hall had seen;
A sudden fit of ague shook him,
He stood as mute as poor Macleane (q).

Yet something he was heard to mutter,
"How in the Park beneath an old tree, (Without design to hurt the butter,
Or any malice to the poultry,)

(o) Groom of the Chamber.
(p) The Steward.
(q) A famous highwayman hanged the week before.
"He once or twice had penn'd a sonnet;
"Yet hop'd, that he might save his bacon:
"Numbers would give their oaths upon it,
"He ne'er was for a conj'rer taken."

The ghostly prudes with hagg'd face
Already had condemn'd the sinner.
My Lady rose, and with a grace——
She smil'd, and bid him come to dinner.

"Jesu-Maria! Madam Bridget,
"Why, what can the Viscountess mean?
(Cried the square-hoods in woeful fidget)
"The times are alter'd quite and clean!

"Decorum's turn'd to mere civility;
"Her air and all her manners show it.
"Commend me to her affability!
"Speak to a Commoner and Poet!"

[Here 500 Stanzas are lost.]
And so God save our noble King,
And guard us from long-winded Lubbers,
That to eternity would sing,
And keep my Lady from her Rubbers.
STANZAS TO MR. BENTLEY.

A FRAGMENT.

[These were in compliment to Mr. Bentley, who drew a set of Designs for Mr. Gray's Poems, particularly a Head-piece to The Long Story.]

In silent gaze the tuneful choir among,
    Half pleas'd, half blushing let the muse admire,
While Bentley leads her sister art along,
    And bids the pencil answer to the lyre.

See, in their course, each transitory thought
    Fix'd by his touch a lasting essence take;
Each dream, in Fancy's airy colouring wrought,
    To local symmetry and life awake!

The tardy rhymes that us'd to linger on,
    To censure cold, and negligent of fame,
In swifter measures animated run,
    And catch a lustre from his genuine flame.
Ah! could they catch his strength, his easy grace,
   His quick creation, his unerring line;
The energy of Pope they might efface,
   And Dryden's harmony submit to mine.

But not to one in this benighted age
   Is that diviner inspiration giv'n,
That burns in Shakespeare's or in Milton's page,
   The pomp and prodigality of heav'n.

As when conspiring in the diamond's blaze,
   The meaner gems, that singly charm the sight,
Together dart their intermingled rays,
   And dazzle with a luxury of light.

Enough for me, if to some feeling breast
   My lines a secret sympathy impart;
And as their pleasing influence flows confest,
   A sigh of soft reflection heave the heart *.

* * * * * * * * *

* The words in Italic were supplied by Mr. Mason.
SKETCH

OF

HIS OWN CHARACTER.

[This was written in 1761, and was found in one of his Pocket-Books.]

Too poor for a bribe, and too proud to importune;
He had not the method of making a fortune:
Could love, and could hate, so was thought somewhat odd;
No very great Wit, he believ'd in a God.
A Post or a Pension he did not desire,
But left Church and State to Charles Townshend and Squire.
THE

FOUR FOLLOWING POEMS,

ATTRIBUTED TO

MR. GRAY,

WERE NEVER BEFORE COLLECTED.

[The first of these (Lyric Stanzas) might be a hasty performance, to which he thought it not necessary to give the credit of his name. With respect to the other three jeux d'esprit, (undoubtedly his) the reason for their being anonymously sent forth into the world will be obvious to every Reader.]

LYRIC STANZAS.

THYRSIS, when he left me, swore
In the Spring he would return—
Ah! what means the op'ning flower!
And the bud that decks the thorn!
'Twas the nightingale that sung!
'Twas the lark that upward sprung
Idle notes! untimely green!
   Why such unavailing haste?
Gentle gales and sky serene
   Prove not always Winter past.
Cease, my doubts, my fears to move,
Spare the honour of my love.
EPIGRAM.

[Mr. Etoph, of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, was a person as remarkable for the eccentricities of his character, as for his personal appearance. A Mr. Tyson, of Bene't College, made an etching of his head, and presented it to Mr. Gray, who wrote under it the following lines:]

Thus Tophet look’d; so grin’d the brawling fiend,
Whilst frightened prelates bow’d, and call’d him friend.
Our mother-church, with half-avened sight;
Blush’d as she bless’d her grimly proselyte;
Hosannas rung thro’ Hell’s tremendous borders,
And Satan’s self had thoughts of taking orders.
STANZAS
SUGGESTED BY A VIEW, IN 1766,
OF THE SEAT AND RUINS OF A DECEASED NOBLEMAN, AT KINGSGATE, KENT.

OLD, and abandon'd by each venal friend,
Here H——d took the pious resolution
To smuggle a few years, and strive to mend
A broken character and constitution.

On this congenial spot he fix'd his choice;
Earl Goodwin trembled for his neighb'ring sand,
Here sea-gulls scream, and cormorants rejoice,
And mariners, though shipwreck'd, fear to land.

Here reigns the blust'ring North and blighting East,
No tree is heard to whisper, bird to sing;
Yet Nature could not furnish out the feast,
Art he invokes new terrors still to bring.
Now mould'ring fanes and battlements arise,
Turrets and arches nodding to their fall,
Unpeopled monast'ries delude our eyes,
And mimic desolation covers all.

"Ah!" said the sighing peer, "had B—te been "true,
"Nor, —, —, —'s friendship vain,
"Far other scenes than this had grac'd our view,
"And realiz'd the glories which we feign.

"Purg'd by the sword, and purify'd by fire,
"Then had we seen proud London's hated walls;
"Owls should have hooted in St. Peter's choir,
"And foxes stunk and litter'd in St. Paul's."
JEMMY TWITCHER;

or,

THE CAMBRIDGE COURTSHP.

[This jeu d'esprit was written a short time previous to the Election of a High Steward of the University of Cambridge, for which Office the Noble Lord alluded to made an active Canvass.]

When sly Jemmy Twitcher had smugg'd up his face,
With a lick of court white-wash, and pious grimace,
A wooing he went, where three sisters of old
In harmless society guttle and scold.

Lord! sister, says Physic to Law, I declare,
Such a sheep-biting look, such a pick-pocket air!
Not I for the Indies!—You know I'm no prude,—
But his name is a shame,—and his eyes are so lewd!
Then he shambles and straddles so oddly—I fear—
No—at our time of life 'twould be silly, my dear.
I don't know, says Law, but methinks for his look
'Tis just like the picture in Rochester's book;
Then his character, Phizzy,—his morals—his life—
When she died, I can't tell—he once had a wife;—
They say he's no Christian, loves drinking and w—g,
And all the town rings of his swearing and roaring,
And filching and lying, and Newgate-bird tricks;—
Not I; for a coronet, chariot and six.

Divinity heard, between waking and dozing,
Her sisters denying, and Jemmy proposing:
From table she rose, and with bumper in hand,
She stroked up her belly, and stroked down her band—

What a pother is here about wenching and roaring!
Why, David lov'd catches, and Solomon w—g:
Did not Israel filch from the Egyptians of old,
Their jewels of silver and jewels of gold?
The prophet of Bethel, we read, told a lie;
He drinks—so did Noah;—he swears—so do I:
To reject him for such peccadillos were odd;
Besides, he repents—for he talks about G—

[To Jemmy]
Never hang down your head, you poor penitent elf,
Come buss me—I'll be Mrs. Twitcher myself.
POEMS:

 Addressed to, and in memory of,

 MR. GRAY.

 [Except the second and sixth, none of these were ever before collected.]
TO

MR. GRAY, UPON HIS ODES.

BY DAVID GARRICK, ESQ.

REPINE not, Gray, that our weak dazzled eyes
Thy daring heights and brightness shun;
How few can trace the eagle to the skies,
Or, like him, gaze upon the sun!

Each gentle reader loves the gentle Muse,
That little dares, and little means;
Who humbly sips her learning from Reviews,
Or flutters in the Magazines.

No longer now from Learning's sacred store
Our minds their health and vigour draw;
Homer and Pindar are rever'd no more,
No more the Stagyrite is law.
Tho' nurst by these, in vain thy Muse appears
   To breathe her ardours in our souls;
In vain to sightless eyes and deaden'd ears,
   The lightning gleams, the thunder rolls:

Yet droop not, Gray, nor quit thy heaven-born art,
   Again thy wondrous powers reveal;
Wake slumbering Virtue in the Briton's heart,
   And rouse us to reflect and feel!

With ancient deeds our long chill'd bosoms fire,
   Those deeds that mark Eliza's reign!
Make Britons Greeks again, then strike the lyre,
   And Pindar shall not sing in vain.
ODE TO MR. GRAY,
ON
THE BACKWARDNESS OF SPRING.
BY THE LATE MR. RICHARD WEST.

DEAR Gray, that always in my heart
Possessest far the better part,
What mean these sudden blasts that rise
And drive the Zephyrs from the skies?
O join with mine thy tuneful lay,
And invoke the tardy May.

Come, fairest Nymph, resume thy reign!
Bring all the Graces in thy train!
With balmy breath and flowery tread,
Rise from thy soft ambrosial bed;
Where, in elysian slumber bound,
Embow'ring myrtles veil thee round.
Awake, in all thy glories drest,
Recal the Zephyrs from the west;
Restore the sun, revive the skies,
At mine, and Nature's call, arise!
Great Nature's self upbraids thy stay,
And misses her accustom'd May.

See! all her works demand thy aid;
The labours of Pomona fade:
A plaint is heard from ev'ry tree;
Each budding flow'ret calls for thee;
The birds forget to love and sing;
With storms alone the forests ring.

Come then, with Pleasure at thy side,
Diffuse thy vernal spirit wide;
Create, where'er thou turn'st thine eye,
Peace, Plenty, Love, and Harmony;
Till ev'ry being share its part,
And Heav'n and Earth be glad at heart.
Ode

On

The Death of Mr. Gray.

Me quoque Musarum studium sub nocte silenti
Artibus assuetis sollicitare solet.

Claudian.

Enough of fabling, and th' unhallow'd haunts
Of Dian' and of Delia, names profane,
Since not Diana nor all Delia's train
Are subjects that befit a serious song;
For who the bards among
May but compare with the lamented Gray!
Whose pensive solemn lay
Drew all the list'ning shepherds in a ring,
Well pleas'd to hear thee sing
Thy moving notes, on sunny hill or plain,
And catch new grace from thy immortal strain.
O wood-hung Menai, and ye sacred groves
Of Delphi, we still venerate your names,
Whose awful shades inspir'd the Druids dreams.
Your recess, tho' imagin'd, Fancy loves,
And thro' these long-lost scenes delighted roves:
So future bards perhaps shall sing of Thames,
And as they sing shall say,
'Twas there of old where mus'd illustrious Gray!
By Isis' banks his tuneful lays would suit
To Pindar's lofty lyre, or Sappho's Lesbian lute.

Oft would he sing, when the still Eve came on,
Till sable Night resum'd her ebon throne,
And taught us, in his melancholic mood,
To scorn the great, and love the wise and good;
Told us 'twas virtue never dies,
And to what ills frail mankind open lies;
How safe thro' life's tempestuous sea to steer,
Where dang'rous rocks and shelves and whirlpools oft appear.
And when fair Morn arose again to view,
A fairer landscape still he drew,
That blooms like Eden in his charming lays,
The hills and dales, and Heav'n's cerulean blue,
Brighten'd o'er all by Sol's resplendent rays.
The musky gale, in rosy vale,
And gilded clouds on azure hills,
The fragrant bow'rs, and painted flow'rs,
And tinklings of the silver rills;
The very insects, that in sun-beams play,
Turn useful monitors in his grave moral lay.

But, ah! sad Melancholy intervenes,
And draws a cloud o'er all these shining scenes.
'Tis her, alas! we often find,
The troubler of each great unbounded mind,
And leagu'd with her associate Fear,
Will tremble lest the turning sphere,
And sinking earth, and reeling planets run
In dire disorder with the falling sun.
But now, great Bard, thy life of pain is o'er;
'Tis we must weep, tho' thou shalt grieve no more.
Thro' other scenes thou now dost rove,
And cloth'd with gladness walk'st the courts above,
And listen'st to the heav'nly choir,
Hymning their God, while seraphs strike the lyre.
Safe with them in those radiant climes of bliss,
Thou now enjoy'st eternal happiness.
FRAGMENT OF AN ODE ON THE DEATH OF MR. GRAY.

* * * * * * * * *
Fair are the gardens of the Aonian mount,
And sweet those blooming flow'rs
Which paint the Maidens' bow'rs.
And clear the waters of the gurgling fount:
Swift they wind through chequer'd allies;
Huddling down to th' open vallies;
Where the quick ripple in the sunbeams plays,
Turning to endless forms each glance of twinkling blaze.

O'er the gay scene th' enamour'd inmates roam:
And gather fresh ideas as they rise
From Nature's manifold supplies.
Alas! for whom?
Many a gleam of sprightly thought,
Many a sad and sable mood,
Whether from dazzling lustre brought,
Or nurs'd by shades of darksome wood,
Keep death-like silence on their native shore,
Since he, that gave them speech, is heard no more.

Flown is the spirit of Gray
Like common breath to mingle with the air:
Yet still those Goddesses peculiar care,
That breathe harmonious lay.
Retir'd to yonder grassy mound
In leaves of dusky hue encompass'd round,
They bid their plaintive accents fill
The covert hollows of the bosom'd hill:
With liquid voice and magic hand
Calliope informs the band:
Hush'd are the warblers of the grove, attentive to the sound.

"Soft and slow
"Let the melting measures flow,
"Nor lighter air disturb majestic woe.
"And thou, sage Priestess [1] of our holy fire,
"Who saw'st the Poet's flame expire,
"Thy precious drops profusely shed
"O'er his well-deserving head.
"Thou nurtur'dst once a grateful throng,
"When Milton pour'd the sweets of song
"On Lycidas sunk low [2].

"Now wake that faithful lyre—mute Dulness
"reigns:
"Your echoes waft no more the friendly theme;
"Clogg'd with thick vapours from the neighb'ring
"plains,
"Where old Cam hardly moves his sluggard
"stream.
"But when some public cause
"Claims festive song, or more melodious tear,
"Discordant murmurs grate mine ear.
"Ne'er model'd by Pierian laws,

[1] Cambridge University, where Gray died.
[2] In 1638 the University published a volume of poems to the memory of Mr. Edward King, Milton's Lycidas.
"Then idly glares full many a motley toy,
Anacreontic grief, and creeping strains of joy.

"Far other modes were thine,
"Victim of hasty fate,
"Whom now the powers of melody deplore;
"Whether in lofty state [3]
"Thou bad'st thy train divine

"Of raptures on Pindaric pinions soar:
"Or hoping from thyself to fly
"To childhood's careless scenes [4],
"Thou sent'st a warm refreshing eye
"On Nature's faded greens:

"Or when thy calm and steadfast mind
"With philosophic reach profound
"Self-pleasing vanities resign'd,
"Fond of the look, that loves the ground [5];
"Discern'd by Reason's equal light,
"How gaudy Fortune cheats the sight;

"While the coarse maid, inur'd to pain,
Supports the lab'ring heart, and Virtue's happiest reign.

But most the music of thy plaintive moan [6]
With lengthen'd note detains the list'ning ear,
As lost in thought thou wander'st all alone
Where spirits hover round their mansions drear.

By Contemplation's eye serenely view'd,
Each lowly object wears an awful mien:
'Tis our own blindness veils the latent good:
The works of Nature need but to be seen.

Thou saw'st her beaming from the hamlet-sires
Beneath those rugged elms, that yew-tree's shade;
Where now, still faithful to their wonted fires [7],
Thy own dear ashes are for ever laid."

[7] Gray was buried at Stoke, the scene of the Elegy.
STANZAS

ON

THE DEATH OF MR. GRAY.

BY A LADY.

WHERE sleeps the Bard who grac’d Museus’ hearse
With fragrant trophies by the Muses wove!
Shall Gray’s cold urn in vain demand the verse,
Oh! can his Mason fail in plaintive love?

No; with the Nine inwrapp’d in social woe,
His lyre unstrung, sad vigil he must keep;
With them he mourns, with them his eyes o’erflow,
For such a Bard immortal Maids can weep.

Their early pupil in the heav’ny lore
Of sacred poesy and moral song,
They taught the youth on eagle wing to soar,
And bore him thro’ aërial heights along.
Fancy, obedient to their dread command,
   With brilliant Genius, marshall'd forth his way;
They lur'd his steps to Cambria's once-fam'd land,
   And sleeping Druids felt his magic lay.

But vain the magic lay, the warbling lyre,
   Imperious Death! from thy fell grasp to save;
He knew, and told it with a Poet's fire,
   "The paths of Glory lead but to the grave."

And shall the Bard, whose sympathizing mind
   Mourn'd o'er the simple Rustic's turfy cell,
To strew his tomb no grateful Mourner find,
   No Village Swain to ring one parting knell?

Yes, honour'd shade! the fringed brooks I'll trace,
   Green rushes culling thy dank grave to strew;
With mountain flow'rs I'll deck the hallow'd place,
   And fence it round with osiers mix'd with yew.
THE TEARS OF GENIUS:

AN ODE.

to

THE MEMORY OF MR. GRAY.

BY J. T———.

On Cam's fair banks, where Learning's hallow'd fane

Majestic rises on the astonished sight,

Where oft the Muse has led the favourite swain,

And warm'd his soul with Heaven's inspiring light,

Beneath the covert of the sylvan shade,

Where deadly cypress, mix'd with mournful yew,

Far o'er the vale a gloomy stillness spread,

Celestial Genius burst upon the view.
The bloom of youth, the majesty of years,
The soften'd aspect, innocent and kind,
The sigh of sorrow, and the streaming tears,
Resistless all, their various pow'r combin'd.

In her fair hand a silver harp she bore,
Whose magic notes, soft-warbling from the string,
Give tranquil joy the breast ne'er knew before,
Or raise the soul on rapture's airy wing.
By grief impell'd, I heard her heave a sigh,
While thus the rapid strain resounded thro' the sky:

Haste, ye sister powers of song,
Hasten from the shady grove,
Where the river rolls along,
Sweetly to the voice of love.

Where, indulging mirthful pleasures,
Light you press the flow'ry green,
And from Flora's blooming treasures
Cull the wreaths for Fancy's queen.

n 2
Where your gently-flowing numbers,
Floating on the fragrant breeze,
Sink the soul in pleasing slumbers
On the downy bed of ease.

For graver strains prepare the plaintive lyre,
That wakes the softest feelings of the soul;
Let lonely Grief the melting verse inspire,
Let deep'ning Sorrow's solemn accents roll.

Rack'd by the hand of rude Disease
Behold our fav'rite Poet lies!
While every object form'd to please,
Far from his couch ungrateful flies.

The blissful Muse, whose favouring smile
So lately warm'd his peaceful breast,
Diffusing heavenly joys the while,
In Transport's radiant garments drest,
With darksome grandeur and enfeebl'd blaze,
Sinks in the shades of night, and shuns his eager gaze.
The gaudy train, who wait on Spring [1],
Ting’d with the pomp of vernal pride,
The youth who mount on Pleasure’s wing [2],
And idly sport on Thames’s side,
With cool regard their various arts employ,
Nor rouse the drooping mind, nor give the pause of joy.

Ha! what forms, with port sublime [3],
Glide along in sullen mood,
Scorning all the threats of Time,
High above Misfortune’s flood

They seize their harps, they strike the lyre,
With rapid hand, with Freedom’s fire.
Obedient Nature hears the lofty sound,
And Snowdon’s airy cliffs the heavenly strains resound.

[1] Ode on Spring.
In pomp of state, behold they wait,
With arms outstretched, and aspects kind,
To snatch on high to yonder sky,
The child of fancy left behind:
Forgot the woes of Cambria's fatal day,
By rapture's blaze impell'd, they swell the artless lay.

But ah! in vain they strive to sooth,
With gentle arts, the tort'ring hours;
Adversity [4], with rankling tooth,
Her baleful gifts profusely pours.

Behold she comes, the fiend forlorn,
Array'd in Horror's settled gloom;
She strews the briar and prickly thorn,
And triumphs in th' infernal doom.
With frantic fury and insatiate rage,
She gnaws the throbbing breast and blasts the glowing page.

No more the soft Æolian flute [5]
Breathes thro’ the heart the melting strain;
The powers of Harmony are mute,
And leave the once-delightful plain;
With heavy wing, I see them beat the air,
Damp’d by the leaden hand of comfortless Despair.

Yet stay, O! stay, celestial pow’rs,
And with a hand of kind regard,
Dispel the boist’rous storm that lours
Destructive on the fav’rite bard;
O watch with me his last expiring breath,
And snatch him from the arms of dark, oblivious death.

Hark the Fatal Sisters [6] join,
And with Horror’s mutt’ring sounds,
Weave the tissue of his line,
While the dreadful spell resounds.

"Hail, ye midnight sisters, hail,
"Drive the shuttle swift along;
"Let your secret charms prevail
"O'er the valiant and the strong,

"O'er the glory of the land,
"O'er the innocent and gay,
"O'er the Muse's tuneful band—
"Weave the fun'ral web of Gray."

'Tis done, 'tis done—the iron hand of pain,
With ruthless fury and corrosive force,
Racks every joint, and seizes every vein:
He sinks, he groans, he falls a lifeless corse.

Thus fades the flow'r nipp'd by the frozen gale,
Tho' once so sweet, so lovely to the eye:
Thus the tall oaks, when boist'rous storms assail,
Torn from the earth, a mighty ruin lie.
Ye sacred sisters of the plaintive verse,
Now let the stream of fond affection flow;
O pay your tribute o'er the slow-drawn hearse,
With all the manly dignity of woe.

Oft when the Curfew tolls its parting knell,
With solemn pause yon Church-yard's gloom survey;
While Sorrow's sighs, and tears of Pity tell,
How just the moral of the Poet's lay [7].

O'er his green grave, in Contemplation's guise,
Oft let the pilgrim drop a silent tear:
Oft let the shepherd's tender accents rise,
Big with the sweets of each revolving year;
Till prostrate Time adore his deathless name,
Fix'd on the solid base of adamantine fame.

EPITAPH

ON

MR. GRAY'S MONUMENT,

IN

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

No more the Grecian Muse unrivall'd reigns,
To Britain let the nations homage pay!
She boasts a Homer's fire in Milton's strains,
A Pindar's rapture in the lyre of Gray.